DARWIN AND MODERN SCIENCE. Essays in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Charles Darwin and of the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of The Origin of Species. Edited by A. C. SEWARD, Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge.

Roya 8vo with 2 Portraits and 3 Plates, 18s. net

At the suggestion of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Syndics of the University Press decided in March, 1908, to arrange for the publication of these Essays. The authors were asked to address themselves primarily to the educated layman rather than to the expert, and it was hoped that the publication of the essays would serve the double purpose of illustrating the far-reaching influence of Darwin's work on the progress of knowledge, and the present attitude of original investigators and thinkers towards the views embodied in Darwin's works. Some of the authors have more especially concerned themselves with the results achieved by Darwin's own work, while others pass in review the progress of research on lines which, though unknown or but little followed in his day, are the direct outcome of his work.

A GRAMMAR OF THE OLD TESTAMENT IN GREEK ACCORDING TO THE SEPTUAGINT.
By H. ST. JOHN THACKERAY, M.A.
VOL. I.—INTRODUCTION, ORTHOGRAPHY AND ACCIDENCE.

Crown 8vo. 8s. net

A complete and independent Grammar of the LXX. has until quite recently been wanting, and the student had to be content with such casual assistance as was given in the New Testament Grammars. The Septuagint, in view both of the period which it covers and the variety of its styles, ranging from the non-literary vernacular to the artificial Atticistic, affords the most promising ground for the investigation of the peculiarities of the Hellenistic or "common" language.

"It is difficult to express too high commendation for the scholarly rendering of the text. When the labour of translation of the digest is complete it cannot fail to confer a benefit on all who desire to seek the fountain of the law. Nowhere is there collected a greater mass of erudite information, of clear exposition and logical reasoning."

THE Publishers' Circular

No Case for Coercion

It is much to be regretted that some of our most important publishers have been told that they ought to resign their membership of the Publishers' Association because they are unable to agree not to publish books at a certain price within a certain time.

No such suggestion has been made officially by the Association or its Council, but it has been made by members, and we can only imagine that it was done without due consideration of what the result would certainly be—if the suggestion were carried out, viz., the crippling, if not the destruction, of the Publishers' Association.

Of course there can be no harm in publishers meeting unofficially and passing resolutions expressing hopes that such and such action may or may not be taken. The Publishers' Association itself has repeatedly done this, and no doubt, so far as they could, members have respected and acted on the wishes of their Association. But there is all the difference in the world between this and a demand for the resignation of members who are not in a position to fall in with the wishes of other members of the Association.

But we feel confident that the Publishers' Association as a body will never in the future, as it has never in the past, say to any of its members, "Accept our ruling as to when and at what price and in what style you are to publish your books—or resign." It is not an association of Anarchists.

Imagine for a moment that when the Association was started (and we have some right to refer to its foundation) one of the stated objects had been to dictate to publishers the prices, styles, and times of publication of their books—well, it never would have started at all. That is so self-evident that it seems to us to be a complete reason for refusing to entertain even any suggestion of boycotting or coercing certain publishing houses on this question, on which every publisher has a right to say "that is my business" in the way we all say it when we mean we resent interference.

It has been suggested that there should be a conference of all concerned—authors, publishers, and booksellers—but it would be a pure waste of time, because the authors are not unanimous on the point, the publishers are not, and the booksellers are equally divided, or, rather, they are not equally divided. You will find one class of bookseller, with a trade in the best and better class of books, against the cheap edition, and two of his neighbours making a good profit out of selling it.

It is impossible to leave the author out in considering this question—there ought to be no thought of leaving him out—and, as a matter of fact, much the most business-like and sensible exposition of the whole business that has appeared since the cheap cloth book question came up again was the Report of the Committee of the Authors' Society on it. We have referred to the conclusions come to previously, but the following copy of the Report, given by permission of The Author will come in very appropriately at the present moment. It will be seen that every point seems to have been considered most carefully and from all sides.

Report on the Sevenpenny Cloth Bound Copyright Novel

MEETING OF PUBLISHERS AND AUTHORS

On December 21st, 1908, we attended a meeting at 39, Paternoster Row, on the invitation of Mr. Longman, and were met there by Mr. Longman, Mr. Macmillan, Mr. Reginald Smith, Mr. Methuen, and Mr. Hutchinson.

These gentlemen called our attention to the effect of the issue by the firm of Nelson, of Edinburgh, of copyright novels bound in cloth at 7d. net, and urged us, on the following grounds, to use our influence to dissuade authors from adopting this form of publication:—

1. That the present customary price of 6s. could not be maintained in competition with a new customary price of 7d., as book-buyers would not only prefer to wait for the sevenpenny edition, but would receive an impression that 6s. is an excessive price for a novel;

2. That as novels at 7d. could make a profit only on condition of attaining a very large circulation, the substitution of that price for 6s. would make it impossible to publish many novels which at present readily find a publisher, and in particular would make it much more difficult for novices to get their first books brought out at the publisher's risk;

3. That the soundness of these views is proved by the fact that during the past year booksellers have found great difficulty in disposing of 6s. novels;

4. That any author allowing a novel to be sold at 7d. will find the sales of his next book at 6s. suffering a considerable decrease.

In the course of the discussion which ensued, it was agreed by the publishers present that flimsy sixpenny editions in paper covers do not injure the sale of 6s. books. Later on we shall see that this view is not shared by the booksellers. But no objection was made by the publishers to 1s. books or to any of the intermediate prices. It was the cloth-bound book of good appearance at 7d. that was alleged to be mischievous.

Later on we took an opportunity of informing ourselves of the position from the point of view of the advocates of the sevenpenny books. We were informed that the manufacture of these books has been organised on the most elaborate modern methods by costly machinery which dispenses with hand labour, and which involves at the outset a command of capital on a scale which places it beyond the competition of ordinary book-manufacturing businesses. There is, therefore, no likelihood of the system being discontinued, as the machinery already in existence is too costly to be abandoned, and its output is so large that the lowest possible prices are necessary to enable a sufficient quantity to be sold to keep the plant fully employed. Besides, there are already many copyright novels in the market at 7d., under contracts with the publisher which presumably secure him against the author's withdrawal. All that can be done, therefore, is for authors to refuse to enter into such contracts in future.

Is this advisable? It is admitted that the majority of novels published are dead, for business purposes, before the end of two years, as far as the ordinary 6s. edition is concerned. They can, however, if they are good stories, be revived by a cheap edition, and yield to the author a further harvest and a valuable advertisement. So far both the 6s. publishers and the sevenpenny ones are agreed. The difference of opinion is that the 6s. publishers contend that the cheap reprint must be a sixpenny one, bound in paper and unfit for the library shelf, whereas the sevenpenny publishers believe in the cloth-bound, permanent, and presentable volume retailed at 7d. Thus the dispute is not as to whether there should be cheap reprints or not, but only as to whether the reprints should be "cheap and nasty" or cheap and nice.

Obviously it would need very strong evidence to persuade authors to sacrifice their artistic instincts so far as to choose the former alternative. They would choose it only under the pressure of a conclusive proof of serious pecuniary loss; and it is practically impossible to convince any author that the revival of a dead book, accompanied by a substantial advance on account of royalties, will damage him financially. But the issue of a cheap edition whilst the 6s. edition is still alive is quite another matter. The next step in our investigation convinced us that though an attempt to suppress cheap editions altogether would be neither successful nor commendable, they should certainly be withheld during the lifetime of the 6s. edition.

This next step was a conference with representatives of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland. The President, Mr. Henry W. Keay, with Mr. Hanson and Mr. B. H. Blackwell, were good enough to meet us and place before us communications from twenty-six booksellers throughout the kingdom, besides discussing the matter with us in the light of their own experience.

In the main the evidence of the booksellers bears out the argument of the publishers. The sevenpenny cloth-bound novel has the effect of making the public complain of the 4s. 6d. (6s.) novel as too dear. Customers wait for the cheap edition; and several provincial booksellers have given up stocking 6s. books altogether. Practically the only dissentients are the large firms with many bookstalls and shops throughout the country, such as Messrs. Smith & Son and Messrs. Wyman. They do not find that the sevenpenny has interfered with the 6s. novel. They declare that each appeals to a different public.

The booksellers do not distinguish the sixpenny paper reprint from the sevenpenny cloth-bound one as confidently as the publishers. They are generally of opinion that all cheap reprints make it more difficult to sell at 4s. 6d., and they applaud the practice of Miss Marie Corelli in abstaining altogether from cheap editions. They also differ from the publishers in having no hope of stopping the sevenpenny reprint. Too many of their members have already ceased to stock 6s. books and thus become dependent on the lower prices to make any such step acceptable to them. What they desire is a time limit within which they can assure their customers that there is no possibility of a cheap edition appearing. Without any prompting from us they suggested two years as a suitable period.

1. Making all allowances for such concurrent causes of the slump in 6s. books as reckless over-production by publishers at certain seasons, and retrenchment of expenditure by purchasers owing to bad trade, and for doubts cast on the reality of the slump by one London bookseller in a large way of business who reports a revival of demand for 6s. books, as well as for the opinion quoted above of the firms of Smith and Wyman, we are convinced that the standard price of 6s. has been shaken by the sevenpenny novel in the case of booksellers keeping a single shop and depending on the custom of people of moderate or slender incomes; and as this is still the typical means of distributing books in the kingdom, we recommend the establishment of a time limit on which the booksellers and the public can rely as fixing the period within which it will be impossible to obtain a cheap edition of a new book published at 6s.

2. We suggest that this limit should be at least two years. This period may wisely be extended at the author's discretion in cases where the 6s. edition is still enjoying a substantial sale; indeed, it must be understood that the bookseller's assurance to the purchaser that there will be no cheap edition for two years does not imply that there will necessarily be one even then, as it is not clear that the policy of maintaining a standard 6s. price for all books by certain authors is not in their case a sound one. The two years is therefore a minimum. In fixing that term we have been guided by the evidence as to the lifetime of an average 6s. book. We have taken it as being, roughly, about eighteen months. In view of the terms offered to authors for sevenpenny reprints, we doubt whether a longer time limit than two years would be faithfully observed; and without such observance the usage could not be created; for the assurances of booksellers as to the impossibility of cheap editions being obtainable in less than two years would soon be contradicted by the evidence of their own shelves.

3. We suggest that steps should be taken by the Committee of Management of the Society of Authors to ascertain how far the members are prepared to pledge themselves to observe the suggested time limit. A similar inquiry by the Publishers' Association would complete the evidence as to the possibility of establishing a firm usage in the book market.

We add the following general comments for the information of authors.

The 6s. edition is very largely a circulating library edition. The advocates of the sevenpenny book estimate the proportion at 80 per cent. to the libraries and 20 per cent. to the public. Among the publishers hostile to the sevenpenny book, one went so far in the opposite direction as to put the proportion at half and half. These are probably the limits. Obviously the proportion varies from book to book according to the impatience of the public to read the book or its desire to keep it when read. But all the estimates left the average 6s. book practically dependent on the circulating library for its feasibility as a commercial enterprise. As the library subscriber does not care what a book costs, and has therefore no inducement to wait for the cheap edition, novelty is much more important to the libraries than cheapness. To the bookseller cheapness is more important than novelty. Many booksellers report that they have given up stocking 6s. books; but all libraries have to stock them. Therefore it may be said that the average 6s. book depends for its existence on the libraries. Now if a new book can be obtained for 7d. in a form and binding actually more convenient and attractive than the 6s. form, and not less permanent, many library subscribers will buy it, and thus reduce the quantity ordered by the libraries. A point may be reached in this process at which the 6s. edition is not worth producing; and this means that many books which are now only produced because of the high rate of profit at 6s. and the demand of the libraries, would not be produced at all unless the publisher were guaranteed against the appearance of a cheap edition for as long as he has any expectation of selling at 6s. Such expectation in the case of an average book is negligible after the lapse of eighteen months or so.

The buyers of sevenpenny novels are an increasing public, who buy to read, and to keep, and to read again. We have evidence before us, which we have no reason to doubt, that a novel re-issued at 7d. keeps its place, and does not die—at all events, not so soon as its 6s. forerunner.

The public which is able and willing to pay 7d., but not more, for a good novel, is said to be an increasing and intelligent public, discriminating keenly between books, but comparatively indifferent to the names and reputations of the authors.

It is not contended by the sevenpenny publishers that authors could get a living at present by writing sevenpenny books. The sevenpenny book, so far, is always a reprint; and it is assumed that the author has already been remunerated, wholly or in part, for the work of writing it by the sale of the first edition at 6s. or some such comparatively high price.

There is, therefore, no question as yet of publishing in the first instance at 7d.

The difficulty at present in the way of such a publication is that the improvement in the machinery of production has not been accompanied by any corresponding development of the means of distribution. The business of bookselling remains much as it was when the mass of the population could not read. There are millions of potential readers in the country who cannot get books for want of bookshops. The readers are there, and the machinery capable of supplying the books is there; but the means of bringing the two together are still to seek; and for this reason, whatever policy authors may adopt as to reprints, they must maintain the 6s. standard for first editions, for at least two years, until a great development in the business of book distribution creates circulations of a magnitude at present out of the question.

G. BERNARD SHAW.

It will be seen that the time limit is considered the crux of the whole matter. It is pretty certain that authors will not agree to wait a period of five years; in fact—its suggestion is a little cruel—if authors never died it would be all right. We believe that two years will meet the views of authors and publishers who wish to let the world have the capital little cloth sevenpenny pocket edition. Authors and publishers who see only a Trafalgar from the French side in Nelson's great adventure can postpone their issue of sevenpennies for five years or the lifetime of the author, and seven years after if they like, if the latter period does not exceed the legal duration of the copyright.

In talking to a bookseller about this sevenpenny sensation, he said: "What is the use of talking about it? It's done!" We cannot help thinking that the sevenpenny cloth reprint and the new forthcoming 2s. original novel series will find their level and be all forgotten before many moons are over—we mean forgotten in the sense of being dangerous to the "entente cordiale" in the book trade. The danger would be in attempting to boycott firms for producing them—that will never be done with the sanction of the Publishers' Association as a body.

Booksellers to Meet at Birmingham

THE NATIONAL BOOK TRADE PROVIDENT SOCIETY holds its annual general meeting at the Imperial Hotel, Temple Street, Birmingham, on Friday next, May 21st, at 7.30 p.m.

Mr. B. H. Blackwell of Oxford will occupy the chair, and will be supported by many booksellers from the provinces and from London; whilst the trade in Birmingham, Coventry, Leamington, Rugby, and Lichfield will naturally be fully represented. Amongst those in the City and the neighbourhood who have promised to be present or represented are:—Mr. C. Combridge, J.P., Messrs. Cornish Brothers, the Midland Educational Company, Messrs. Eld & Blackham, Mr. Downing, Mr. Baker, Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son (Birmingham), Messrs. Burgis & Colbourne, Ltd. (Leamington), Messrs. W. W. Curtis, Ltd. (Coventry), Mr. Lawrence, Mr. E. A. Greer, Mr. Over (Rugby), and Messrs. Lomax (Lichfield).

The meeting will be open to all members of the bookselling and publishing trade, and invitations are being sent to all of them and their assistants, but should any be overlooked, the Secretary, Mr. R. W. Thornton, 17, Philpot Lane, London, E.C., will be happy to forward tickets if application be made for them.

Everything points to a very successful and influential gathering, which it is anticipated will result in a strong branch of this flourishing society being formed in Birmingham and district, and the Committee hope that members will give their support by making a special effort to be present.

Special arrangements have been made with the Imperial Hotel for the accommodation of visitors.

After the business meeting a smoking concert will be held, for which an excellent programme has been arranged. Mr. Frank Denny of London will preside.

London members will leave Euston by the 2.30 train, and the Secretary would be glad if all London members intending to take part in the meeting would communicate with him so that the party may travel together.

Printers' Pie for 1909

We Think the Provincial Booksellers should have a Taste

THE success which has rewarded the efforts of Mr. W. Hugh Spottiswoode in the production of the popular annual Printers' Pie seems likely this year to be greater than ever; for the issue for 1909, in the editing of which Mr. Spottiswoode is assisted by Mr. Arthur Croxton, promises to achieve a literary and artistic record. Year by year the circulation of Printers' Pie has grown by leaps and bounds, and by the sale of the new issue, which is now ready, Mr. Spottiswoode hopes to be able to provide a record contribution to the funds of the Printers' Pension Corporation on whose behalf it is produced. The fact that this year's President of the Corporation is the Prince of Wales adds interest to the issue of Printers' Pie, 1909, for the profits from its sale go to swell His Royal Highness's subscription list. In addition to the Printers' Pension Corporation, the Booksellers' Provident Institution, the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution, the Newspaper Press Fund, and the Artists' General Benevolent Institution will benefit by the sale of the annual.

A great number of authors and artists of prominence in the field of bright literature and humour are associated with the production of Printers' Pie.

The price of the Pie for 1909 is 1s., it is published by The Sphere and Tatler, Ltd., and as the whole of last year's edition was sold out by the publisher in three days, early application for copies should be made.

Inasmuch as booksellers in the provinces do so large a proportion of the sale of this work, we hope Mr. W. Hugh Spottiswoode will see his way to let the National Book Trade Provident Association, in which they are so greatly interested, have a taste of his "Pie"; it would help the sale more than anything else.

Notes and Announcements

MR. HEINEMANN announces for publication on May 21st, a book which should prove of great interest to all students of the Napoleonic Period. It is entitled "The Exile of St. Helena—the Last Phase in Fact and Fiction," by Philippe Gonnard. It deals with what is known as the Napoleonic Legend, claims to dispose "once and for all" of the imaginary and exaggerated stories which have grown up round the name of Napoleon Buonaparte. The book is to be profusely illustrated.

"H. G. Wells is fortunate," says the Edinburgh Evening Dispatch, "in being again drawn upon by T. Nelson & Sons for their Sevenpenny Library. Already 'Kipps' and 'The Food of the Gods' have their places in the series, and this month there has been added 'Love and Mr. Lewisham.' Mr. Wells is a novelist who appeals to a large constituency, and the production of this interesting story in cheap form, printed, as usual, in fine, clear type, will be welcomed by all who have a shelf on their bookcases for Nelson's Sevenpenny."

The main argument against the sevenpenny cloth novel is that it will kill the demand for the author's new works at 6s. If this view were correct Mr. Wells's new story "Tony Bungay" ought to have been born dead, whereas it is having a larger sale at 6s. than any of the author's previous works reached in the same period.

A question put to us by a bookseller was, "Suppose I have copies of the 6s. editions of the books which Messrs. Macmillan will issue on the 24th at 7d., what is to become of my 6s. editions—who will buy them?" We believe the general custom of changing old editions for new will be followed in such a case. It has always been a rule of Messrs. Macmillan, and of most other publishers, to exchange the old edition for the new.

Another bookseller says, "Are you aware that Messrs. Macmillan are offering to send out their new sevenpenny cloth novels 'on sale or return'?" Yes, we are aware of it, and venture to think it is a mistake; but if Messrs. Macmillan elected to give ten thousand copies to the trade as an advertisement of the new series, nobody could prevent their doing so.

The Rev. E. J. Watson Williams has written an interesting monograph in connection with an old Hampshire church which dates from about 1000 A.D., entitled "Odd Tit-bits from Tichborne Old Church Books." It will be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock.

WERNER LAURIE, Clifford's Inn, London.

"Daphne; or, Marriage à la Mode," by Mrs. Humphry Ward, is to be published by Messrs. Cassell on May 21st. The recent visit of Mrs. Humphry Ward to the United States has resulted in a book that promises to be one of the most important of the season. The work deals with American society as it is, with its present laxity of regard for the marriage bond. It will contain four illustrations in colours, six pen drawings and coloured end-papers by Fred Pegram.

Messrs. Cassell are publishing Dr. Saleeby's new book, "Parenthood and Race Culture: an Outline of Eugenics." This book constitutes the first attempt to define as a whole the general principles of race culture, or eugenics, as conceived by Mr. Francis Galton, F.R.S., to whom it is dedicated. The author assumes that there is no wealth but life—that the culture of the racial life is the vital industry of any people, that conditions of parenthood, and especially as regards its quality rather than its quantity, are the dominant factors that determine the destiny of nations. The book follows the lines of the three lectures delivered by the author at the Royal Institution in 1907 and 1908, and teaches that Great Britain must make the choice between National Eugenics and the imminent fate of all her Imperial predecessors, from Babylon to Spain.

The romance by William Le Queux called "Spies of the Kaiser" is now ready for publication, and Messrs. Hurst & Blackett will issue it immediately. It has been already mentioned that the book "reveals the ingenious manner in which German secret agents are at work gaining our Naval and Military secrets and gathering information useful to an invader and collecting secret stores of German arms in England. There will also be specimens of maps, plans and reports made by spies." What a funk we "never will be slaves" are getting into!

Some time in the present month Mr. Murray will publish the Memoir of the late Sir Charles Wilson, which has been compiled from his diaries, notebooks, official reports and from letters to Lady Wilson, by Sir Charles Watson, who for well over thirty years was his friend and comrade. Sir Charles Wilson's career was in many respects remarkable and varied. At an early age he served on the North American Boundary Commission; he did a great deal of work in connection with the Ordnance Survey of the United Kingdom and Ireland. He was in the Intelligence Branch of the War Office, and later was Director-General of Military Education. Besides such official labours as the above-mentioned Sir Charles served in Egypt and in Eastern Europe in various political and military capacities, but perhaps his most memorable service to the world was the Archæological investigation he made in Asia Minor, particularly in Palestine. The book is a mine of information and interest, and is another tribute to the practical efficiency of Royal Engineer officers.

Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. are bringing out at twopence an attractive series of booklets about Bishops, forty-eight pages, with good cover portraits, including Bishop Wilkinson of St. Andrews, by Henry Scott-Holland; Bishop G. A. Selwyn, first Bishop of New Zealand, by E. A. Bulley, and Bishop W. W. How of Wakefield, by F. D. How.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately, at a popular price, a new book on bridge, entitled "Bridge Up-to-Date, including Auction Bridge and the Rules and Laws of the Game," by the well-known bridge expert, E. A. Tennant. The author endeavours, while keeping the simplicity of advice to beginners, to show the latest developments of the game.

For admirers of the writings of the late Mr. F. Marion Crawford, additional and melancholy interest attaches to "The White Sister" by him, just published at 6s. by Messrs. Macmillan, who will also publish shortly "Artemis to Actæon, and other Verse," by Edith Wharton, and "The Poems and Sonnets" of Louise Chandler Moulton.

Mr. Werner Laurie is publishing in his Leather Booklets "Cambridge Colleges," by R. Brimley Johnson. The volume presents an outline of the history of each college, a description of its present buildings and undertakings, with a word on the distinguished men who have lived within its walls.

"The Tears of Desire" is the title of a new novel by Coralie Stanton and Heath Hosken, which Mr. Werner Laurie publishes.

At its price (3d.) The Planet is one of the best of the illustrated weekly journals and is continually improving—which is as it should be, as planets cannot stand still.

In these days of Tariff Reform the work of Friedrich List stands to be remembered. Hitherto English and American readers have had no adequate Memoir of the Economist, who was the founder of the German Zollverein and advocate of the American system of Protection. In her "Life of Friedrich List and Selections from His Writings," which will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. on the 18th inst., Miss Margaret E. Hirst republishes for the first time List's "Outlines of American Political Economy," and includes some other (translated) pieces which lend important aid to his ideas and aims. Miss Hirst has had access to an important collection of List's papers and manuscripts, among the municipal archives at Reutlingen, his native town, and from these papers and from other sources she has been able to give a more complete account than any which has yet appeared of List's English and American experiences. Miss Hirst's brother, Mr. F. W. Hirst, the Editor of the Economist, supplies an Introduction to the volume.

Number 3 of The New Magazine will be ready on Thursday next, May 20th, and again the excellence of the reading matter and the beauty of the illustrations maintain in every respect the high promise of the first number; the art supplement is printed in a delicate terra cotta and a beautiful shade of green. The Woman's Section is as comprehensive as ever.

A third edition of Mr. Henry Lucy's "Sixty Years in the Wilderness" has been called for, and is now in the Press. The American edition, published by Messrs. Dutton & Co., of New York, is inscribed to "His Excellency, Whitelaw Reid, Journalist and Statesman."

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will publish on May 26th "A Three-Foot Stool," by Peter Wright, which is partly impressions de voyage of America and partly fiction, and consists of poetry as well as prose.

In addition to the French edition of Captain R. F. Scott's "Voyage of the 'Discovery,'" which was published by Messrs. Hachette & Cie., a Hungarian edition in a slightly abridged form is in preparation. The translation will be the work of Professor D. L. de Loczy and the volume will be included in the series of Descriptions of Remarkable Modern Voyages published by Mr. R. Lampel, of Budapest, under the patronage of the Hungarian Geographical Society.

Professor Svante Arrhenius, of the Nobel Institute, Stockholm, who is now in London lecturing before the Royal Society, has a new work ready for publication. It is entitled "The Life of the Universe," and will be issued immediately by Harper & Brothers in their "Library of Living Thought." The conceptions of all ages concerning the evolution of the universe are critically examined, and the author shows what great advances along indisputable lines have recently been made in this branch of science.

The publication of Mr. William A. Cadbury's "Labour in Portuguese West Africa," which was to have been effected next week, is, we understand, postponed, counsel having advised that publication must be deferred until after the close of certain pending libel proceedings which the author's company and its directors have instituted against a London newspaper.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's new books for Monday include:—The first volume of a new "County Coast" series. In "The Norfolk and Suffolk Coast," Mr. W. A. Dutt deals with the history and romance of coast life, telling true tales of famous shipwrecks, deeds of life-saving, smuggling adventures, and landings and defeats of foreign foes, &c. Then there is a new volume in the "Sociology" series, entitled "The Railways and the Nation: Problems and Possibilities," by Mr. W. Bolland, in which suggestions are advanced for reforms which would introduce simplicity and uniformity, and place railway service, as regards both passengers and goods, within the reach of all; and a fourth edition of Mr. Arthur Hayden's "Chats on Old Furniture: a Practical Guide for Collectors."

Mr. R. Culley has in preparation an important work on "The Social Teaching of the Bible," edited by Samuel E. Keeble. It is to be uniform with that most successful work, "The Citizen of To-morrow."

Messrs. Wm. Blackwood & Sons have just published a revised and collected edition of "West Country Verses," by Arthur L. Salmon, including:—A Song of Devon, Widdecombe on the Moor, The Mouth of the Lyn, Sunset by the Exe, A Devon Wife, A Mother Song, A Village Spinster, "The Wooing O 't," The Old Wife to the New, &c. The late Mr. John Davidson said: "His 'Devon Wife' and 'The Curate' may even be read after Tennyson's dialect poems."

Messrs. Darlington & Co. have completed the new edition of their "London and Environs," which has been thoroughly revised and brought up to date by Mr. E. T. Cook, M.A. There are many new maps and plans and illustrations by well-known artists, and there are three indexes with 10,000 references, making the most complete handbook to London ever issued.

Sale by Auction of the Beaufoy Library

THE library formed during the early part of last century by Mr. Henry A. Beaufoy, who made a fortune out of British wines, &c., is to be sold by Messrs. Christie, Manson & Woods on June 7th and the three following days. As will be seen from Messrs. Christie's advertisement in our columns, the collection contains Illuminated MS., Incunabula, Early Printed Books, some thousands of Civil War, Irish, and other Tracts, and Books of the Aldine, Elzevir, Bodoni, Baskerville and other presses, &c.

The Imperial Press Conference

THE IMPERIAL PRESS CONFERENCE will receive full recognition from The World's Work, the June number of which will be a great Empire Number, dealing with the chief aspects of Imperial progress to date, and especially with the Imperial Press Conference which will take place in that month. The great political, Naval and economic problems of the Empire will be discussed by the foremost Imperial workers of to-day—men whose names are household words. The number will be larger than usual, and have a special Empire cover design. A new feature of The World's Work is that the June issue will have a Summer Fiction Supplement.

A History of France for English Children

BOOKSELLERS who are asked for a history of France for English children should make a note of "France: a Popular History for Young People," by Mary C. Rowsell. Such a good authority as The Guardian says: "It is likely to prove a very welcome book in our schools. It is accurate and impartial. A very conscientious and thorough little history." A new edition at 1s. 6d. has recently been published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, in his admirable series called "The Children's Study." Most attractive in form, binding and matter.

The late Mr. Thomas Howe

WE hope shortly to give a portrait and some account of the late Mr. Thomas Howe, formerly of the well-known firm of booksellers and publishers, Palmer & Howe, of Manchester. The portrait is not available at present, and notes which have appeared about Mr. Howe are described as inaccurate by his son, Mr. C. E. Howe.

A Good Atlas and Gazetteer of the British Isles

MESSRS. GEO. PHILIP & SON (32, Fleet Street, E.C.) have just published a first-rate Atlas and Gazetteer of the British Isles, edited by Geo. Philip, F.R.G.S., providing in a complete and handy form a gazetteer likely to be of great use to business men and tourists, and to those engaged in municipal and parliamentary work. The latter are especially well catered for, as the detailed county maps show the Local Government and Parliamentary Divisions. Railway stations are named almost without exception, a useful feature for travellers and merchants; and a most important feature is the Gazetteer-Index of 164 pp., containing 20,000 names.

Brentford, Middlesex, u.d., m.t., r.s., p.o., soap, sawmills, m.d. Tu. Sa., e.c. Th. P. 15,171. C.4.

Which being interpreted is:—

Brentford, in the County of Middlesex, urban district, market town, has a railway station and post office, chief industries are soap works and sawmills; market days on Tuesdays and Saturdays, early closing of shops on Thursday. Population 15,171. C.4 denotes the square on the map in which Brentford will be found.

We have tested the Gazetteer and have not been able to find it at fault. There is, in addition, a large amount of letterpress referring to Parliamentary matters, &c.; and altogether we have no hestitation in recommending this Atlas-Gazetteer—it is one of the best and most complete we have seen.

Senate Changes in the New American Tariff Bill

IN the Senate, on April 12th, Senator Aldrich reported a Tariff Bill which in many respects, according to The Publishers' Weekly, resembles the Dingley Act. The apparent changes in book materials from those reported in the Payne Bill are the following:—

To be Sold by Auction

On May 20th and 21st Messrs. Sotheby will sell by auction—Selections from the Libraries of Lord Dormer, the late Viscount Bridport, the late C. L. Higgins, Esq. (of Turvey Abbey, Beds.), L. B. Barrett, Esq. (of Steventon, Berks.), and others, comprising a fine series of books bound by Clovis Eve: a unique Caxton volume containing five of his Westminster productions in the original binding; Caxton's Ryal Book, and productions of other early English printers; Illuminated Horæ and other early manuscripts; early printed service books; rare works relating to America; an important series of Nelson documents (1795–1805); and numerous other valuable items.

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's New Sevenpenny Library

The first four volumes of the new Sevenpenny Library of copyright novels, which Messrs. Hurst & Blackett have decided to issue, will be ready immediately. They include: "The Strongest of all Things," and "A Young Man from the Country," by Madame Albanesi; "The Youngest Miss Mowbray," by Mrs. B. M. Croker, and "The Ides of March," by Mrs. Baillie-Reynolds. The books are well printed on good paper, and bound in cloth-gilt, and every book has a decorated title page with a frontispiece drawing by a well-known artist.

The "Naval Annual" for 1909

Messrs. J. Griffin & Co. have just published the twenty-third issue of their famous Naval Annual. Edited by T. A. Brassey, A.I.N.A., it is the publication in regard to things naval. It has long been noted for the completeness and accuracy of its information, and the publishers spare no efforts to keep it thoroughly and exhaustively up-to-date. A work of this description requires definite and certain knowledge, and a glance at the list of contributors to this volume indicates that the publishers have been at pains to obtain the most authoritative writers. We have not space to say more about this book, it is so well known and requires no recommendation; but Messrs. Griffin ask us to remind the trade that copies can be obtained at their offices at 60, Chandos Street, Strand, London, W.C.

"American Catalogue of Books for 1908."—Will booksellers note that the above is now ready, and can be obtained at The Publishers' Circular Office, 19, Adam Street, Strand. It is in one volume, royal 8vo., cloth, and contains a record under author, title, subject and series, also full titles with descriptive notes of books published in America in 1908, statistics of book production, directory of publishers, &c. Price is 18s. net.

International Bibliographical Congress

It was suggested some months ago that the proposed International Bibliographical Congress at Brussels, July, 1910, might give fitting occasion for an International Library Conference, which might either precede or follow the bibliographical meeting, in which, of course, librarians would also be interested. Definite steps have now been taken to this end. M. Louis Stainer, of the Belgian Royal Library, has been charged with the preliminary arrangements for a congress of librarians, as M. Paul Otlet, of the Brussels Bibliographical Institute, had been charged with those for the Bibliographical Congress. The Library Association of the United Kingdom has appointed a Committee of two to consider the matter and arrange tentatively for papers. It is now desirable that the several national associations discuss the practicability of such a conference, which should be really representative of national interests.—New York Library Journal.

Engineering Wonders of the World."—Part II. of this excellent serial was published last Monday, and contained most interesting articles on The Conversion of the Great Western Railway Gauge, The Building of the Ice-Breaking Transport vessel the Baikal, The Severn Tunnel, The Greatest Aerial Ropeway in the World, &c.

Notes from Provincial Towns

[Under this heading we publish every week brief notes of book matters from the various provincial towns. We invite our readers to send us any items likely to be of any interest and use to the trade generally. A supply of stamped addressed Report Forms will be sent on application.]

BATH

In view of the Historical Pageant which will be held on July 19th to 24th, Messrs. B. and J. F. Meehan are publishing a series of "Eight Episodes in the History of Bath." Six of these have been published up to the present, and the complete set, illustrated from rare prints, will be obtainable post free for 1s. 4d. The text is from the pen of Mr. J. F. Meehan, author of "The Famous Houses of Bath and District."

HASTINGS

Messrs. Bateman & Kiddie, of 37, Havelock Road, have removed to 41, Robertson Street. The business will in future be carried on under the name of P. J. Bateman.

LEICESTER

We are asked to publish the following obituary notice:—On February 27th Mr. Arthur Spencer, aged 51 years, the only son of the late Mr. Thomas Spencer, of the firm of John and Thomas Spencer, of Leicester, at his mother's residence, Tichborne Street, Leicester, after a long and painful illness. Mr. Spencer carried on the business of the late John and Thomas Spencer, Market Place, until purchased by Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, a few years ago.

Objection to Notice of Net Books

To the Editor of The Publishers' Weekly.

DEAR SIR,—A number of publishers issuing net books insert at the title page a small slip printed as follows:—

> NET BOOK.—This book is supplied to the Trade on terms which will not allow of Discount to the Public.

These slips seem to defeat the purpose for which they are intended, as, when a customer who is not accustomed to receive a discount sees these slips, he invariably asks on what we allow a discount.

It seems to the writer that it would be better to omit these slips entirely. The way to get list prices for books is to make no mention of discount; then, when the book is priced at $2, the customer knows the price is $2.—Very truly yours,

CHARLES G. PEKER.

New York, April 19th.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish early next month "The Conquest of the Isthmus," by Hugh C. Weir, who will give the real story of the great battle with the jungle that is being waged by the great khaki army of the United States, who are joining the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and building the greatest dams and locks in the history of the world.

Pick-ups

AUTHOR–ITATIVE.—A publisher is a man who hopes to make an income by bringing out books.—The Author.

A SCOTSMAN walked into a Montreal bookshop and, as the assistant thought, asked for Robert Burns. On being told this the proprietor of the shop himself got down three or four editions of the poet and took them to the waiting Scotsman. The customer, however, shook his head hopelessly, and said, "It's nae Robert Burns I askit for, but rubber bands!"

Mr. C. R. L. Fletcher's "History of England"

MR. C. R. L. FLETCHER'S "History of England," which, besides being as readable as an ordinary novel to the general reader, has proved so valuable an aid to teachers, is now practically ready for publication. The importance of the concluding period is so great that Mr. Murray has found it necessary to issue it in separate volumes, nominally divided at the year 1792, the last portion bringing the reader down to the Battle of Waterloo. Those who in previous volumes have made the acquaintance of the Manor of Tubney will be interested to find that two of the descendants of that interesting, if mythical locality contribute personal narratives (in one case supplemented by a plan) of the great final struggle between Wellington and Napoleon. Not the least important parts of the book will be found to be the detached chapters which deal with India, Scotland and Ireland, and that which is called the Industrial Revolution—or, as it is expressed in the author's characteristically alliterative style, "Men and Machines, Morals and Manners"—a vivid coup d'oeil of the rise of our Empire's greatness.

MR. HEINEMANN announces for publication shortly a little series entitled "The Laurel-Crowned Letter" series, to consist of the best letters by the most famous writers, such as Lamb, Shelley, Lady Montagu, Madame De Sévigné, Chesterfield, Walpole, and Cowper.

Obituary

MR. ROBERT LOW, of Palace Court, Bayswater, W., who died on April 17th, left estate valued at £137,202 gross, with net personalty £113,416. The testator left £1,000 to the Stationers' Company of London, upon trust to apply the income annually in charitable gifts in the sole discretion of the Court of Assistants of the said Company for the time being; £500 each to the Westminster Hospital and the Brompton Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest; and £200 each to the Printers' Pension Corporation, St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, and the West London Hospital, Hammersmith.

Mr. Benjamin Collins, of Mason House, Great North Road, East Finchley, and of Mason House, Great Arthur Street, Clerkenwell, bookbinder, who died on April 12th, aged 79, left estate of the gross value of £28,694, with net personalty £13,779. On the death of the survivor of his wife and of his two sons, John and Benjamin, he left from the proceeds of sale of his freehold estate in Great Arthur Street and Little Arthur Street, £1,800 to the Bookbinders' Pension and Asylum Fund, and £630 each to the Great Eastern Hospital for Children, the London Hospital, and the Tottenham Hospital.—The Times.

Napoléon

THIS time a hundred years ago Napoleon was making history in great style. Everything about him interests us more every year. We notice that M. le Comte de Fleury has provided the text, English as well as French, for a complete and authentic history of the Napoleonic epoch in fifty plates, reproductions of iconographic documents, some classic, but for the most part taken from scarce and valuable works. The publisher is M. A. Michalon, Rue de Vaugirardio, Paris.

Relics of Queen Victoria

MR. FRANCIS EDWARDS, 83, High Street, Marylebone, London, sends us a catalogue of "Authentic Personal Relics of Queen Victoria, articles which belonged to her in childhood, girlhood, and when Queen," including her first parasol, her work-box, her copy of Letts's Diary for the year 1835, with entries in it made by her; two pencil drawings previous to 1837, a presentation set of the Life of the Prince Consort, &c., 7 vols. each with autograph inscription by her late most Gracious Majesty. We who have lived in so many of the same years as Her Majesty love her memory, but we can never appreciate her worth as it will be appreciated by future ages.

Letters to the Editor

The Sevenpenny Bogie

SIR,—It has rather amused me to see how this small Sevenpenny stone has been set rolling, and picking up terrors on its way, till now it has assumed dimensions, which, according to some excited correspondents, threaten to destroy the whole business of novel publishing and inflict "incalculable damage" on the publishing community in general.

It seems to me to be just one of those questions which should be left emphatically to the common-sense of every publisher, and with which no publishers' or booksellers' association should interfere. What vast difference is there between sevenpence and a shilling in the book market that one should be left to the publisher's own discretion, and the other be bound down by a five years' chain, by which time, in nine cases out of ten, it would not be worth anything at all? Why novel publishers themselves should pass such a resolution as this, asking to be chained up for five years, cutting their own throats, passes comprehension. They first of all create a Frankenstein monster, and then tremble at his feet. What publisher in his senses would think of producing a doubtful sevenpenny whilst the six-shilling or other edition was steadily selling? And who but the publisher can best judge whether the sale at the higher price is falling off or not? It is true that in some exceptional cases the two editions have gone off well together; two branches of the public are thus hit, and who is injured? There may be cases in which it would be desirable for the publisher to take back copies unsold of the higher priced edition in exchange for the equivalent value of the new issue. This should also be left to the good sense of the publisher. He should have a perfectly free hand. The publication of an original novel first at sevenpence is an experiment which few publishers will be inclined to try more than once. The whole scare is, in my humble opinion, little more than a "tempest in a teapot," and will as quickly bubble itself out.—Yours, &c.,

E. M.

Le (3-Vol.) Roi est Mort: Vive le (7d.) Roi.

DEAR SIR,—I notice that in your current issue a Glasgow bookseller states that "it is proposed" to return to the 3-volume form for new fiction, the half-guinea "three-decker" to be followed after a decent interval by a "cheap" edition at 5s. net. Your correspondent believes the change would kill off much trash; possibly it might, and possibly he would have been quite safe in including authors and booksellers amongst the killed, and publishers amongst the wounded—at least.

Now apart from the fact that there is (unfortunately) a large market for "trash" we must not lose sight of these two points—(a) the libraries will never again consent to be saddled with "three-deckers," and (b) the public will never be induced to believe that a five shilling novel is "cheap." If I ever expected to have such a sum to risk—which, as I am a bookseller, is not likely—I would lay £500 to Glasgow man's £5, that the experiment outlined in his letter would prove a disastrous failure to all concerned in it.

It may be true that, as Mr. Keay states in his letter, the class of people who buy new fiction can well afford to pay more than 7d., but it is equally certain that in future they will not be willing to do so. Neither would the patrons of the circulating libraries submit to the infliction of the 3-volume novel at any price.

The announcement just made by Messrs. Macmillan seems to indicate that the evenpenny has come to stay, for a time, and no one can complain that the items included in their very strong list are being prematurely offered to the sevenpenny public.

I would like to suggest in conclusion that in future all who aspire to become publishers should first serve for not less than three years behind a bookseller's counter.—Yours truly,

A BOSCOMBE BOOKSELLER.

"The Booking Fee" Question

DEAR SIR,—I have read with interest the correspondence on the above, and it seems there is a side of this question not yet touched upon. In the first place the provincial bookseller obtains very favourable contracts from the London carriers for the carriage of his parcels, and therefore he naturally insists that his parcels shall be consigned by that carrier. The carrier promptly exacts the fee of 2d. per parcel from every sender, and whether the sender (i.e., in our case the publisher) charges such fee on the bookseller's invoice is a matter which appears to be dealt with in a different manner by each publishing house. There is little doubt, however, that the publishers pay the larger portion.

By forcing the publisher to despatch parcels by a certain carrier, the bookseller also puts the publisher to heavy expenses for cartage, as carriers will not collect parcels in the same way that a railway company is bound by law to do.

I am aware that publishers may have their parcels collected if they guarantee to give all their parcel traffic to the carrier, but the booksellers make this impossible, each bookseller having his own particular "fancy" as regards carriers.

Let me therefore place three points before you:—

(1) The excellent contract the bookseller has with the carrier, whereby he obtains his parcels carried at a very low rate.

(2) The fact that the 2d. booking fee being paid by the publisher to the carrier enables the latter to give the bookseller a more favourable contract.

(3) The expense the publisher is put to in the cartage of parcels to the carrier's London warehouse.

Consideration of these three items leads one to delicately suggest that the booksellers should pay all booking fees, or at least that some more equitable arrangement should exist than the present.

There is also another point, and one in which I am afraid the booksellers have little interest. When they make their returns (i.e., "on sale" goods, magazines, &c.) they do so invariably by their usual carrier, and on delivery that carrier enforces payment at railway scale rates and sometimes more. Will some provincial bookseller kindly tell me if in addition to this he has paid 2d. booking fee at the other end? I don't think so.

A word on the booking fee itself might assist matters. The carrier is not governed by the rules and regulations of the Board of Trade and therefore can exact such fees, whereas a railway company cannot do so. I believe the 2d. is in most cases divided, as follows—1½d. per parcel to the carrier's provincial agent, and ½d. to the carrier himself. Some provincial booksellers are themselves carriers' agents and can check this.

The carrier consigns all parcels in bulk, and therefore, although he charges the bookseller considerably less than ordinary railway scale rates, he is yet able to make a large profit, to which he adds one halfpenny per parcel received from the sender.

Finally, I would ask the provincial bookseller to realise that in order that he shall have the benefit of a favourable contract with his carrier, the publishing trade generally pays some thousands of pounds per annum in booking fees and cartage.

Faithfully yours,
PUBLISHER'S TRADE MANAGER.
London, W.C.

DEAR SIR,—May I endorse Mr. Firmin's main contention in his letter in your issue of May 8th, viz.: the need for a larger profit for the bookseller if he is to be induced to put his heart and brains into the business of bookselling.

Booksellers are tired of the parrot-cry of the publisher that the bookseller will only give additional profit away to the public. The maintenance of the net book system shows the hollowness of the excuse.

To a publisher whose terms are of the most rigid description who recently made this reply to me, with the addition that he "would not be a party to anything which would break down the net book system," I replied, that "he was not a more ardent supporter of the net book system than myself," the difference between us being that he had no objection to sweating the bookseller, whereas I objected to being sweated.

Now what the bookseller is suffering from is the uncertainty as well as the inadequacy of the profit. Inevitably, owing to the enormous number of volumes published, an appreciable part of his business must be done through collectors, upon which, after deducting discount, establishment expenses and carriage, a dead loss is incurred. Then come the various terms upon which stock orders can be given. (1) Journey terms varying with their settlement discounts from 2½ per cent. to 10 per cent. with odd copy; (2) subscription terms which may sometimes be a little better; and (3) "ordinary terms." I sometimes ask myself whether any arrangement could be more foolish. I should have thought that if there was anything self-evident as essential to sustained and persistent interest in a business, it was certainty of reward, which is the very thing absent in the bookselling trade, and this merely from arbitrary and traditional arrangements.

In many cases it is impossible to buy upon the best terms even "on journey" owing to the inability to make up 7 or 13 copies at a price, especially in the case of expensive books.

Publishers seem to forget that the best advertisement for their books is to have them in booksellers' shops, and that a bookseller, up to a certain point, can sell what he likes. Acting on this knowledge and recognising that books which do not bring a certain and definite profit are not worth keeping in stock, I absolutely refuse to buy such books, with a result perfectly satisfactory to myself, as, except in the case of two or three publishers, I get the terms for which I stipulate for the quantities I am prepared to order.

I also never re-order between journeys for stock unless I can order on journey terms. I feel sure if other booksellers would do likewise we should soon have different arrangements in the trade. Not being exclusively a bookseller I am aware that I am in an advantageou position for pursuing this course. But for the encouragement of others I can say my trade in books has steadily increased, and is consequently also more profitable.

I am, yours sincerely,
ALFRED RAWLINGS.

The Arcade,
Reading.

[We hope that in time the net book system will have become so general and so well established that it may be possible to reconsider the trade allowance question. It is not merely a question for the publishers, their arrangements with authors are affected. Any great change, such as alteration in the terms of supply of net books, will have to be arranged by authors, publishers, and booksellers if the alteration is to be satisfactory to all concerned.—ED.]

Invasion and Omens

DEAR SIR,—The paragraph in your issue of the 1st inst. (page 638) about the "Invasion of 1910" reminds me of the following ancient saying which I heard for the first time when a boy, about sixty years ago. I do not know its origin; perhaps it is one of Mother Shipton's:—

"When Our Lord falls in Our Lady's lap
Then England will suffer some great mishap."

And next year Good Friday will fall on Lady Day. Absit Omen.—Yours truly, F.

May 12th.

The Daylight Saving Bill

DEAR SIR,—As far as the information that has come to me will enable me to say, yours is the first paper to adopt the principle of the Bill, but I cannot say anything more definite than this.

Yours faithfully
W. WILLETT.

[The Fishing Gazette adopted the "Early Bird" policy on the same day (May 6th).—ED. P.C.]

Another Howler

DEAR SIR,—Yet another "howler," this time perpetrated by Mr. H. L. Reynolds offering kindly counsels to colleagues and booksellers in an able article on "The Competition Bogey." He speaks of the uselessness of tools without the mind and the man, and adds: "'Give me the chance and I am the man to build a city' said Voltaire to Richelieu."

Yours faithfully,
HENRY T. SMITH.

64, Marefair,
Northampton.

[It would be a howler if there had been but one man of the name of Richelieu. Voltaire may have said it to his contemporary, the Duke and Marshal of France. Philips' invaluable Dictionary of Biography mentions five Richelieus, all men of distinction, though not equally distinguished.—ED.]

"National Finance": a Correction

DEAR SIR,—In your otherwise excellent little notice of my book, "British National Finance," in the current number you fall into one rather serious mistake. You say, "He states that Scotland drinks more than half as much again as England. This we did not know." This remark is evidently based on page 30, and you will find the comparison is with Ireland, not England. Even then you have overlooked the very important word "apparently," because in the table at the foot of the same page I show the exact alcoholic consumption of each country and the duty paid on it.—Yours faithfully,

J. W. ROOT.

Walton-on-the-Hill,
Epsom.

[Our reviewer evidently did not read Mr. Root's work either too wisely or too well; perhaps the subject got into his head. It reminds us of an incident when, many years ago, we had to remonstrate with a packer, who was packing goods for export, for being evidently a bit fou. The old fellow shook his head solemnly and declared that he was merely overcome by the fumes of an empty rum barrel in which some of the goods were packed by request of our customer.—ED.]

Notices of Books

From Messrs. Jas. Brown & Son.—"Boy Scout Life," a sixpenny publication by Messrs. Jas. Brown & Son, Boy Scout Publishers, of Glasgow, gives a series of actual photographs of Boy and Girl Scout patrols and parties at work, and should go a long way towards familiarising the public with the true significance of this rapidly extending movement, and to convince people how much the organisation can do to direct the wayward energies of juveniles into useful channels and to cultivate their resourcefulness and self-reliance. These pictures illustrate the number of useful services they have to perform, and will show other scouts and scoutmasters how to go and do likewise. The same publishers have a large series of books for the different requirements of Boy Scouts, such as information about knots and splices, first aid work, morse and flag signalling, &c. All their publications are recognised by the authorities of the Boy Scout Organisation in London as official.

From Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward, Ltd.—"Outdoor Carpentry," by S. Walter Newcomb. A second revised and enlarged edition of this useful little book has just been published. It is No. 1 of "The Country House" Series, and is crammed with useful information fully and well illustrated.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—"The Territorial Year Book (1908)." The publishers are to be congratulated on the highly interesting and useful volume which they have just published under the above title. It will be welcomed by everyone who is interested in the Territorial Force, as members of that Force or as citizens who wish it well and follow its development though unable to serve personally. The scheme introduced and worked out by the Secretary of State for War has all along been subjected to the keenest criticism, and good as criticism undoubtedly is, many persons expressed their views before it could have a fair trial. Those persons whose want of knowledge of the subject has led them to form an adverse opinion in haste, will do well to read that part of the book dealing with the history and working out of Mr. Haldane's proposals. Briefly, the Year Book embodies a review of the past year, conditions of service in peace and war; information on armaments, books, official and otherwise, prescribed for Territorial soldiers; the Regiments of the British Army with historical notes, and last, but by no means least, the Territorial Directory, which has been compiled at a great expenditure of time and trouble. The illustrations are a great feature, and include seven of Mr. R. Caton Woodville's fine military works.

From Messrs. John Ouseley, Ltd.—"Vain Tales from "Vanity Fair'" by Louise Heilgers. Mr. Frank Harris, in his short preface to this bunch of clever and incisive short stories, writes: "I do not know anything more perfectly adequate than the style . . ." This may seem rather exaggerated praise, but Miss Heilgers' beautiful cameos have been wrought by the hand of an artist. The themes dealt with are poignant and arresting, and the little plots are cleverly worked up.

From the Same.—"Private Coles—Philosopher," by Scudamore Jarvis. Twenty-nine tales told by Private Coles to his messmates. Most of these tales are exceedingly humorous, and all are written in a clever and engaging manner. It is a remarkably cheap book and averages a good laugh to every two pages or less. We enjoyed reading it very much, and can thoroughly recommend it.

From Messrs. Parker & Son, Oxford.—"An Octaval Instead of a Decimal System." An essay to show the advantages of an eight-figure, and the disadvantages of a ten-figure notation for money, weights and measures, by S. S. Buckman, F.G.S. The main proposition is quite sound, but surely it is too late in the day to alter the case of our system of numeration. Supposing, however, it were so altered there would be no need of the curious device of inverting figures, for the same figures would serve the same purposes. Thus 247 would mean $2.8^2+4.8+7$ instead of $2.10^2+4.10+7$, and there would be no necessity for writing $\angle 82$. The rest of the pamphlet does not call for notice.

From Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.—"The Commonwealth of Australia," by the Hon. Bernhard R. Wise. This is the first volume of a series of books dealing with the Empire beyond the seas, entitled the All Red Series. Its object is to give a full account of the various countries described and "to help on the formation of the habit of thinking Imperially." The present volume is handsomely got up, well illustrated and supplied with maps. The physical aspect of Australia, the life of its people, its system of government and its political life are all fully dealt with, so that the book forms a complete study of things Australian. The author speaks of the country as being "a laboratory of political experiments," and reminds us that 97 per cent. of the population is of pure British descent. Whether the reader wishes for information upon sports, bush life, universities, or religious matters, he will find ample data in the book. The author was formerly Attorney-General for New South Wales.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—"Priscilla of the Good Intent: a Romance of the Grey Fells," by Halliwell Sutcliffe. A story of farm folk, not a very exciting one, or of more than moderate interest. Anyone fond of the Cleveland country will enjoy reading the sayings of Billy, the village fool, who blows the village bellows and sometimes makes clever and quaint remarks

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—"The Mineral Kingdom," by Professor Brauns, translated by L. J. Spencer. This work—which will be completed in 25 parts (5 are already published)—is excellent, and is what one would expect from the pen of such an authority as Professor Brauns, who holds a high position among mineralogists. The subject matter is extremely lucid and accurate, and the work is illustrated with numerous excellent diagrams showing the "crystalline habit" of various minerals. It contains some very realistic coloured plates, and although it forms a good scientific textbook, can be read with advantage by any having no previous knowledge of the subject of mineralogy. We hope the publishers will be able to supply a binding case to contain the complete work.

Royal 8vo with 2 Portraits and 3 Plates, 18s. net

At the suggestion of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Syndics of the University Press decided in March, 1908, to arrange for the publication of these Essays. The authors were asked to address themselves primarily to the educated layman rather than to the expert, and it was hoped that the publication of the essays would serve the double purpose of illustrating the far-reaching influence of Darwin's work on the progress of knowledge, and the present attitude of original investigators and thinkers towards the views embodied in Darwin's works. Some of the authors have more especially concerned themselves with the results achieved by Darwin's own work, while others pass in review the progress of research on lines which, though unknown or but little followed in his day, are the direct outcome of his work.

A GRAMMAR OF THE OLD TESTAMENT IN GREEK ACCORDING TO THE SEPTUAGINT.

By H. ST. JOHN THACKERAY, M.A.

VOL. I.—INTRODUCTION, ORTHOGRAPHY AND ACCIDENCE.

Crown 8vo. 8s. net

A complete and independent Grammar of the LXX. has until quite recently been wanting, and the student had to be content with such casual assistance as was given in the New Testament Grammars. The Septuagint, in view both of the period which it covers and the variety of its styles, ranging from the non-literary vernacular to the artificial Atticistic, affords the most promising ground for the investigation of the peculiarities of the Hellenistic or "common" language.

When the labour of translation of the digest is complete it cannot fail to confer a benefit on all who desire to seek the fountain of the law. Nowhere is there collected a greater mass of erudite information, of clear exposition and logical reasoning."

THE Publishers' Circular

"Rutland est le Véritable auteur des Pièces de Shakespeare

It is necessary that booksellers should be well acquainted with everything connected with Shakespeare. It is not necessary for them to believe that because, when his work was done, he retired quietly and did not advertise, that therefore he was not the author of his works. Booksellers will use their own judgment on this disputed question of the author of the works, and will be more or less interested in all attempts to dethrone the man most of us delight to honour as the chief glory of our nation and the supreme genius of the world.

We are not sure that any Welshman has tried to make Shakespeare eat the leek, but Englishmen, Scotchmen, Irishmen, Americans, and Germans have proved him clown to their own satisfaction; and now Belgium, little Belgium, has sent forth her David to slay the Goliath of Stratford.

The most amusing part of this amazing discovery is that we owe it to Mr. Sidney Lee—it was he who put this Belgian discoverer on the track of the true Shakespeare. Now Mr. Lee, as the world knows, is the greatest champion the man of Stratford-on-Avon has ever had.

In the current number of that admirable French periodical La Grande Revue * there is an article entitled "Rutland est le véritable auteur des pièces de Shakespeare," written by M. Célestin Demblon. This gentleman, who is absolutely convinced that he has made himself eternally famous as the discoverer of the "concealed poet," is introduced by the Editor of the Revue as a distinguished member of the Belgian Chamber, in which he represents Liége; as Professor of History and of French Literature in the new University of Brussels, and as a devoted and impassioned student of Shakespeare. The Editor adds a sly touch when he says that so great is M. Demblon's admiration for the works attributed to Shakespeare that nothing but the interference of his friends has prevented his presenting his interpretation of Hamlet on the stage.

M. Demblon has written a most interesting article. He is not intentionally rude to the defendant W.S. in his endeavour to prove his plaintiff's case, unless it is rude to suggest that the real author's original of Falstaff was Shakespeare—no wonder M. Demblon says "dût le lecteur sursauter!"

This article by this Belgian Shakespearian student—who manifestly has studied the subject far more deeply than the great majority of people—is merely a sort of introduction or avant courrier of a big work which he has nearly finished, in which he considers he has proved, beyond all question, that Roger Manners, fifth Earl of Rutland (1576–1612) was the author of the works attributed to Shakespeare.

The history of M. Demblon's discovery is briefly as follows:—Long a profound admirer of Shakespeare—struck as every human mind must be by the immensity of the works as compared with the little we know of the writer—for a time he was attracted by the Baconian theory, only to reject it as untenable. At the beginning of last year he was looking through some back numbers of The Nineteenth Century and After when he came across a long article entitled "The Future of Shakespearian Research." By a curious irony of things he says this article, which put him on the track of the real author, who has been so assiduously hunted for more than half a century, was by M. Sidney Lee. "L'un des plus érudits Shakespeariens de l'heure présente et le plus intraitable qui soit à l'égard des Baconiens." In this article Mr. Lee referred to the interesting discovery of Mr. Henry Maxwell Lyte, of the Public Records Office, of a document at Belvoir Castle in which Shakespeare and Burbage are mentioned—our readers will remember all about that; Mr. Lee did not attach much importance to it. M. Demblon says that by exhausting all their energies in devouring each other, like the two dogs in the fable, the Shakespearians equally with the Baconians have missed the great truth, i.e., that the author of "All's Well that Ends Well" was Roger Manners, M.A., of Cambridge, Earl of Rutland born at Belvoir Castle in 1576, died in 1612, at the age of thirty-six—the age of Raphael, Mozart and Byron.

Roger Manners, fifth Earl of Rutland, says M. Demblon, lost his father at the age of 12, in 1588. His mother, Elizabeth Charleton, placed him at Queen's College Cambridge, where he distinguished himself—like Lord Byron later—by talents and passions alike precocious. In 1596, at the age of twenty, having already published anonymously the two poems "Venus and Adonis" and "The Rape of Lucrece," he was sent, with instructions written for his guidance by Bacon, to the University of Padua, travelling by way of Paris and Switzerland. Illness prevented his remaining more than a year and a half on the Continent, and after living at Padua, Verona, and Venice ("three places to remember!") he returned to take his degree as Advocate in 1598, when he was 22. Although not one of the most regular of students, he became one of the most cultivated men of the period, a literary enthusiast, and gifted with powers of imagination on which it is unnecessary to dwell. Those who knew him were astonished that he produced nothing; then, naturally, no more was thought about it. He went through some military campaigns, and married in the early part of 1599 the daughter of Philip Sidney, Elisabeth Sidney, whose widowed mother had married his friend Essex. Space forbids our following the history of the Earl as given by M. Demblon, up to the time when he wrote his poetical testament "The Tempest," a souvenir of his residence at the Azores.

The reasons of prudence, propriety and of personal safety which led the Earl of Rutland to pay Shakespeare such great sums for the use of his name previous to Essex's conspiracy—in which he was concerned and for which he was heavily fined—existed still with the advent of James. "Rutland judged that the time to unveil himself had not yet arrived. His health had often been assailed, and death surprised him—and soon afterwards also the admirable wife with whom he had united his sublime life."

It really is a pretty idea this of M. Demblon, that the daughter of Sir Philip Sidney, the delicious author of "Arcadia," should have "probably collaborated to a certain extent" with her husband (Ben Johnson said she had poetical talent equal to her father's), and that she is the original of Beatrice in "Much ado about Nothing," and Portia in the "Merchant of Venice." According to M. Demblon the original from which the characters of Romeo, Benedict, Prince Hal, Hamlet, and Prospero were painted, was the author himself, the young Earl of Rutland, whose own experience of courts, and camps, and life is depicted in them.

This then is the interesting conclusion to which this indefatigable student and passionate admirer of the works of Shakespeare is led. For him as for Gustave Flaubert there exists only Shakespeare—other great souls yes! but this is a combination of all.

But if M. Demblon does not look sharp his claim to have made the greatest literary discovery in the history of literature will be forestalled. It seems that when attending as a deputy the International Peace Congress at Berlin last autumn, he learned by chance, from the mouth of an employé of the National Library there, that a learned German had arrived at the same conclusion as he had!

Why, since we have the immortal works, need we trouble as to who wrote them. Because it would be inhuman to leave it at that. One of the main attractions of the next world is to see whether it is to be, or not to be, Shakespeare, and the solution of other great mysteries. Why should we know so little as Mr. Lee can tell us, and be satisfied?

In our opinion the greatest tribute of one great mind to another is Carlyle's estimate of Shakespeare in his "Heroes and Hero Worship," and all these disputes as to the author have the inestimable advantage of making people study the works, so that even the theories and inventions of Donnelly and Mrs. Gallup have their uses.

"Our National Flag."—The S.P.C.K. publish a useful little penny book under the above title. It is written by an old naval officer, and describes the history and composition of the flag with correct dimensions, &c. If everyone who flies a flag on Empire Day or on other days of national rejoicing were to spend a penny on this publication, many errors in flying and choice of flags would be avoided.

Notes and Announcements

The week just closing has been made for ever memorable by the death of George Meredith. The papers have been full of his praises; whether posterity will endorse the opinions of our critics is not for us to say or see. The Daily Telegraph, for instance, places Meredith, not only in the front rank of writers of this age, but of any age. It is a significant fact that no writer of fiction was so much talked about and so little read. He was indeed "caviare to the general"; he "pleased not the million," as Hamlet says.

Mr. Heinemann announces that the publication of "Studies in Wives," the new volume by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, has been postponed until Friday, June 4th.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will publish immediately a volume containing an article by Mr. St. Loe Strachey on "A New Way of Life," together with the articles derived from it, which appeared recently in The Spectator, and which have attracted considerable attention. The little volume, which will be issued at one shilling net, will also include three papers on the subject of National Service.

Ten volumes of Macmillan's Sevenpenny Series will be published on May 25th. The books are of varied interest and high literary merit, consisting as they do of "The Forest Lovers," by Mr. Maurice Hewlett; "Elizabeth and her German Garden," "A Roman Singer," by Mr. Marion Crawford; "Diana Tempest," by Miss Cholmondeley; "The House of Mirth," by Mrs. Wharton; "Misunderstood," by Miss Montgomery; "The Choir Invisible," by Mr. James Lane Allen; "The First Violin," by Jessie Fothergill; "A Waif's Progress," by Miss Rhoda Broughton; and "John Glynn," Mr. Arthur Paterson's exciting story of life in a London slum. From this list it will be seen that the new series comprises some of the best books of some of the most popular writers. The volumes are attractively bound in blue cloth, with gilt lettering, and their size is $6\frac{3}{4}$ by $4\frac{1}{4}$ inches.

The summer is becoming more and more the time for publishing novels, and amongst the books which Mr. John Murray will publish shortly is "The Score," which Lucas Malet has now completed. The novel will be found thoroughly characteristic of Mrs. Harrison's work, as it most artistically tells the "story of passion."

Miss Dorothy Horace Smith, whose novel, "Miss Mona" (published a year or two ago) was an excellent success, has written a new book, entitled "Frank Burnet," which Mr. Murray will publish about the beginning of June. It is a story of village life in the Midlands. The main characters are Frank Burnet, the vicar's son, and Wattie, a blacksmith's boy. It is expected that this novel will still further enhance the excellent reputation Miss Horace Smith's work has already earned.

Mr. John Lane published this week "Mrs. Gramercy-Park": a novel, by A. R. Goring-Thomas; and will publish on May 28th "Between-Time Poems," by Oliver Davies; and "Sixpenny Pieces," by A. Neil Lyons. Mr. Lyon's new book has for its central figure a "Sixpenny Doctor" in the East End of London.

Messrs. G. Bell & Sons will publish next Wednesday Miss Sheila Kaye-Smith's new story, "Starbrace," a picture of Eighteenth Century life in Sussex; "Modern Homes," described and illustrated by T. Raffles Davison; also another of Mrs. Ewing's stories, "Mrs. Over-the-Way's Remembrances," in Messrs. Bell's Queen's Treasures Series, in the same dainty form as its predecessors in the series.

Under the title "Wind and Hill" Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will publish immediately a volume of poems inspired by the spirit of the mountains and written by Mr. Geoffrey Young, himself a distinguished mountaineer.

Messrs. Stanley Paul & Co. announce for immediate publication "The Spell of the Jungle," a hunting story in Upper India, by Alice Perrin; a new novel by Mrs. Stephen Batson, entitled "The Gay Paradines," and a new novel, entitled "The Chippendales," by Judge Robert Grant.

Mr. John Long will shortly publish a new novel by Curtis Yorke, entitled "Mollie Deverill."

A new volume by Mr. Goldwin Smith will be published on May 24th by Mr. Unwin. It consists of essays on religious and ethical problems, and its title is "No Refuge but in Truth." Mr. Goldwin Smith writes not as a teacher, but an inquirer, seeking for truth and open to conviction.

Mr. Alphonse Courlander, though not yet twenty-eight, has produced four books which have all been of pronounced literary merit. In his new book, "Henry in Search of a Wife," he forsakes tragedy and seeks only to amuse. Mr. Unwin is also doing a 6d. edition of the same author's "The Sacrifice."

"Peace, Power, and Plenty" is the title of a book by Mr. O. S. Marden, which Mr. Unwin will publish on May 24th. Written from an idealistic and optimistic standpoint, it will appeal to readers who are interested in the Christian Science and Higher Thought movement.

Hodder & Stoughton will publish immediately "Imperial Unity: Speeches delivered in Canada by Viscount Milner."

Mr. Grant Richards has published a second edition of Mr. Holbrook Jackson's "Bernard Shaw" at 1s. It deals with the Man, the Fabian, the Playwright, the Philosopher. One critic describes it as "a flushed, eager book, or act of worship."

Mr. Andrew Lang Proposes Prosperity but Prophesies Ruin

Royal Literary Fund

THE 119th anniversary dinner of the Royal Literary Fund was held on May 13th at the Hotel Métropole. Mr. Andrew Lang presided, and there were about 200 ladies and gentlemen present.

Mr. Lang submitted the toast of "Prosperity to the Royal Literary Fund." In the course of a humorous speech he said that on the side of the historian, of the scholar in any department of literature, the business of authorship was toilsome, and as to the rewards the apples of the tree were not great and golden and many, but small and green and few. A man's literary reputation was in inverse ratio to his income. The public were being taught to think that no book should cost more than 7d. He need not point out to economists and statisticians what the consequence of this would be—simple ruin. All the publishers would go on to the Booksellers' Provident Fund and all the authors on to the Royal Literary Fund. (Laughter.) It was the purpose of the Royal Literary Fund to aid authors who needed assistance, and all of them who were not novelists were apt to need it, so the philosopher was bound to address himself to such writers. His advice to the ardent youth who thought of beginning authorship in the field of history, poetry, the essay, literary criticism, archæology, anthropology, and so forth, was "Don't!" These were not studies that supported the student. If they asked him, "Who is to blame?" he threw the burden partly on the broad shoulders of the public, partly on the dulness of the authors who did not deal in fiction. He had written many histories, which if another fellow had written he would have refused to read. (Laughter.) Our richest men and women who denied themselves nothing else denied themselves books. While the public was so thrifty in book-buying the profession of authorship ought to be avoided by all who had not other means of support. He concluded by a reference to the work of the Society and appealed for contributions.

Sir Edward Clarke, in proposing "Literature," said it was a great advantage that books should be so cheap that for a few pounds the poorest student and the working man could command a library which 100 or 150 years ago could scarcely have been possessed by a man of wealth. Were we carrying forward the traditions of the great literature of the past and adding to our inheritance for the days to come? He thought we could answer that question in a confident spirit. We might congratulate ourselves also on the strength of criticism by which our literature of to-day was disciplined and guided.

Mr. Maurice Hewlett acknowledged the toast.

The Secretary announced donations amounting to over £1,300 including an eleventh donation from the King, the Patron of the Fund, of 50 guineas.

The health of the Chairman was afterwards proposed by Lord Tennyson. —The Times.

The Real Enemy of the Second-Rate Author

IT is stated that the cheap edition will be the ruin of the second-rate author. The real enemy of the second-rate author is the first-rate author, or what the public is pleased to think the first-rate author, and if the first-rate author find it profitable to issue a cheap edition why shouldn't he do it if and when he chooses. In a world where, as Ruskin tells us, there is no room for any books but the best books, the second-rate author must take his chance according to the law of the survival of the fittest.—Edinburgh Dispatch.

The "Amasis" Copyright

THE decision of Mr. Justice Jelf, reported in our columns some time ago, restraining by injunction the representation of "Amasis" by Amasis, Ltd., and Mr. Frederick Fenn, and awarding damages against them, came on Tuesday before the Court of Appeal, consisting of the Lord Chief Justice and Lords Justices Moulton and Farwell. The appellants, Amasis, Ltd., and Mr. Fenn, were represented by Mr. Elden Bankes, K.C., and Mr. E. F. Spence, and the respondent, Mr. William Birmann Scholz, professionally known as W. Gunn Gwennett, by Mr. Montagu Shearman, K.C., and Mr. Hayes. The injunction had been granted on the ground of the copyright in Mr. Scholz's comic opera "Son of the Sun" having been infringed by Mr. Fenn's "Amasis," and Mr. Justice Jelf had expressed the opinion that upon a comparison of the two plays he was obliged to conclude that Mr. Fenn had seen the other play. This Mr. Fenn had denied in the witness box. The Lord Chief Justice in giving judgment said that as a matter of law for the subject of the copyright to obtain protection it was necessary for it to be embodied in the words, and that a similarity of plot and general outline was not sufficient to constitute infringement. He was unable to agree with Mr. Justice Jelf that Mr. Fenn was not telling the truth when he said he had not seen or heard of the "Son of the Sun" before he wrote "Amasis," and that in his opinion there was no infringement on Mr. Fenn's part by copying any substantial part of the "Son of the Sun." This appeal must therefore be allowed. Lord Justice Moulton expressed the opinion that there was no ground whatever for finding an infringement by Mr. Fenn, and that he had merely used similar ideas, which were not entitled to protection. Lord Justice Farwell concurred, and the appeal was allowed, judgment being entered for Amasis, Ltd., and Mr. Fenn, with costs of the appeal and in the Court below.

BY request of some of the largest Educational Publishers, our Educational Number will be published on June 5th, instead of in July as hitherto. As usual we shall send out a large number of extra copies direct by post to the Educational Establishments, Heads of Colleges, Schools, &c., &c. Will Advertisers please book space at once.

The late Madame Modjeska

A NEW YORK reader of the P.C. courteously points out that in stating that the second husband of that charming actress, Madame Modjeska, was Sinkiewicz, the author of "Quo Vadis," we were in error. We found the statement in a London daily paper of April 9th, which said, "She determined with her second husband, Count Bozenta Chlapowski Sinkiewicz, the author of 'Quo Vadis,' and others, to found a Polish Colony in America and devote herself to orange and bee farming and the simple life."

Other accounts of the actress (e.g., News of the World, April 11th) mention that with her husband, Count Bozenta, she founded the Polish Colony at Los Angeles, California, and among those who visited there was Henry K. Sienkiewicz, afterwards famous as the author of "Quo Vadis."

Cricket in the Trade

THE PHILOTESIE C.C. (Philip & Tacey, Ltd.) played Relfe Bros. on the latter's ground, Baileys Lane, Tottenham, on May 15th. The match resulted in a win for the former, who scored 111 for 6 wickets, against their opponents' 49. For the winners W. Colbert (Capt.) 47, W. Tacey 35, and L. Wilks 14 (not out) were prominent in batting, while E. Race took 6 wickets for 18 runs.

For Relfe Bros., E. Norton scored 12, and H. Johnston 10.

The Philotesie C.C. meet Mudie's C.C. on the 22nd inst., and the Educational Supply Association on June 5th.

HEINEMANNS v. BURNS & OATES

This match, played at Mottingham on May 15th, resulted in a victory for the latter by 79 runs. For the winners, Horsman (22), Mahoney (16), Brittain (14) batted well, whilst P. Lucas and E. Fagge's bowling proved much too good for the opposing batsmen. Scores:—Burns & Oates, 114; Heinemann, 35. Lucas took five wickets for 13 and Fagge five for 14.

CAXTON PUBLISHING CO. C.C. v. SHENLEY C.C.

The above match, played at Mill Hill Park on Saturday last, ended in a victory for Caxton Publishing Co. C.C. by 25 runs. Chadwick and Harris batted well, the latter also bowling excellently, taking six wickets for 23 runs. Scores:—Caxton Publishing Co. C.C., 74. Shenley C.C., 49.

Sale of Alpine Books

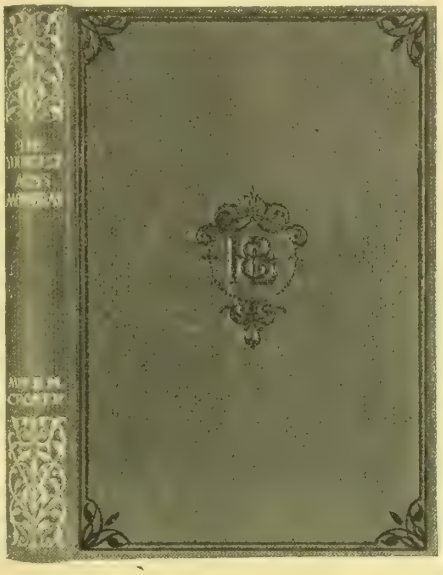
An unusually extensive and, indeed, remarkable collection of Alpine and Mountaineering books will be offered for sale by Messrs. Hodgson & Co. at their rooms in Chancery Lane, on Wednesday next.

It was collected by Sir Maurice Holymann, K.C.B., K.C.V.O., who was for many years Librarian to His Majesty the King (when Prince of Wales) and who held the post of Keeper of the Records of the Duchy of Cornwall. The late owner intimated in his will that the books should be sold by Messrs. Hodgson, and they have been removed from St. James's Palace for that purpose, by order of the executors.

The collection, which numbers upwards of 1,600 volumes, not to mention a large number of pamphlets and maps, comprises the writings of all the best known English climbers, as well as a large selection of German and French books and periodicals, the latter of which are mostly in calf and morocco bindings by Rivière. There is also a complete set of the Alpine Journal from the commencement to date, several folio volumes containing engravings and views of Alpine scenery, and a number of early and curious books relating to Switzerland and the Alps.

On Thursday next Messrs. Hodgson are selling the Library of the late J. H. Radford, Esq., removed from Buckland Monachorum, S. Devon, which contains, inter alia, a copy of the Edinburgh Edition of Stevenson's Works.

John Davidson



It is difficult to express adequately and yet in cold justice the loss literature has sustained in the disappearance of Davidson without seeming to exaggerate. For Davidson was the most vital of our poets; vital in that his soul was triumphantly human, in love with deeds of yesterday, expectant with dreams of to-morrow. He is best known by his earlier works, purely sweet, lyrical, romantic. Recently he developed a philosophy: a philosophy shorn of hope and comfort; and by expressing it in verse he failed to find the consideration due either to the poet or the philosopher. Like a man possessed, he strove to annihilate Christianity for a materialistic religion called Davidsonism. People will listen willingly enough to the comparatively vague rebellion and revolutionary ideas of Shelley, but there are few who do not find tedious the introduction of scientific matter and scientific discussions within the confines of verse. At his best Davidson was a writer of lyrics overflowing with strength and sweetness and direction.—The Bodleian.

Studio Spring Number

The Special Spring No. of The Studio is devoted to the water colour drawings of J. M. W. Turner, R.A., and contains 30 mounted plates in colour. We hope to refer more fully to this important publication next week.

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's New Sevenpenny Novels

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's first list for their New Library of Sevenpenny copyright novels will include two by Mrs. B. M. Croker, two by Madame Albanesi, and one each by Mrs. C. N. Williamson, and Mrs. Baillie-Reynolds, so the list is certainly strong. The books are most attractively bound in cloth gilt, well printed on good paper with frontispiece illustration, and decorated title page, all having a wrapper in two colours. The publishers claim for them that they are the best value ever offered of books of the kind. The first two volumes were published on Friday. They are "The Strongest of All Things," by Madame Albanesi; and "The Youngest Miss Mowbray," by Mrs. B. M. Croker. The next two will follow shortly. The publishers state that these books have been taken up so well by the booksellers that they have already sold almost the whole of the first editions of the first two novels in this series.

Another Publishing Firm Adopts the Daylight Saving Bill

Another publishing firm to adopt the principles of the Daylight Saving Bill is the Caxton Publishing Company.

It was at the request of the employees themselves that the alteration in the hours was made. The firm's offices now open at 8 o'clock and close at 5 o'clock, and 12 o'clock on Saturdays. The innovation has been found to work very satisfactorily.

Part XIII. of "Beautiful Flowers" and Part XIV. of "Wild Beasts of the World" are now ready. (T. C. & E. C. Jack.)

Messrs W. & A. K. Johnston's maps for cyclists and tourists are thoroughly reliable and accurate, and no pains are spared in their production.

The late Mr. William Easton, Publisher and Printer

In the death of Mr. William Easton (uncle of Mr. R. S. Easton, Manchester), retired publisher, and printer and newspaper proprietor, which took place at Valleyview, Jedburgh, N.B., on April 27th, the Borders has lost one of its best known and most respected inhabitants. He was in his 86th year. He was the son of the late Mr. Walter Easton, printer and publisher, who migrated from Edinburgh to Jedburgh in the year 1820, and who had been associated with the Ballantynes in the printing and publishing of the famous Waverley Novels of Sir Walter Scott. These were at first put out under the name of the great "Unknown." Mr. William Easton was for many years in partnership with his elder brother, the late Mr. Andrew Easton, who was Provost of Jedburgh for six years, and was a prominent man in public concerns. They owned, printed, and published The Teviotdale Record newspaper (founded in 1855), besides carrying on one of the largest printing, bookbinding and bookselling businesses in the South of Scotland. After the retiral of the Provost, many years ago, the business remained in the hands of Mr. William Easton, and was under his sole ownership and management till his retirement. Throughout his long life Mr. Easton took a lively interest in public affairs; was a member of the School Board, and for a considerable time occupied the position of chairman.

Several other public bodies had the benefit of his wide local and general knowledge. For a considerable number of years Mr. Easton was acting editor of the paper he founded, and many valuable articles emanated from his prolific pen. He was one of the first to join the Volunteer Movement when it started, and was a member for a long number of years of the Border Rifles. He was a skilled marksman, was a winner in local and district competitions, and attended the national meeting at Wimbledon, being successful in the contests for the Queen's and other competitions. Mr. Easton had a very intimate knowledge of local and Border history, his recollections going back to the time when, as a boy, he frequently saw Sir Walter Scott in the streets of the old-time Border town.

Angling was his favourite sport and pastime, and he had an intimate knowledge of all the famous Border rivers and casts both on the English and Scotch sides. The fly was his favourite lure, and in the gentle art he was extremely successful. One of his favourite spots was where the River Jed joins the Teviot, and for a number of years latterly he hied him there to enjoy relaxation from business by luring the trout to the fly, and in the season by tempting the salmon.

His friends were numerous—many had passed away before him—and he was held in the highest esteem and respect by the community in general. He is survived by a family of three sons and six daughters.

A Great Agricultural Cyclopædia

AFTER SIXTY YEARS

SINCE John Morton brought out, in 1849, his valuable "Cyclopædia of Agriculture" (the copyright of which, by the way, is in the possession of the owners of this new Cyclopædia) many sciences on which the farmer depends have come into existence. Sixty years ago there was no dairy science, no agricultural bacteriology, no agricultural chemistry, and our knowledge of the principles of plant breeding and of insect pests and fungoid diseases was of the most elementary character. And how little interest the farmers of that period took in poultry and egg production, or in fruit growing and market gardening, compared with what is the case nowadays! What a development there has been, too, in the matter of power on the farm. All these subjects are dealt with by experts in Principal Wright's pages.

Even twenty years ago it would have been impossible to bring out such a work as this elaborately illustrated 12-volume Cyclopædia. To start with, as we have seen, much of the knowledge itself was not then in the possession of mankind. Then the number of writers who could contribute clear expositions of what was known was limited.

The Gresham Publishing Co. has no doubt entered upon the publication of this big Cyclopædia in a purely commercial spirit. It does not pose as a philanthropist. On the other hand, it cannot be questioned that in giving farmers the opportunity of obtaining a compendium of the very latest science, dealing with all the processes of agricultural and every part of rural economy, it is doing a good educational work. One thing is certain: had the enterprise not been in the hands of a spirited firm it would have been impossible for farmers to have got these twelve 2½-lb. volumes for less than a five-pound note. Only by the most up-to-date methods of book manufacture and by making a large circulation a certainty has so large a Cyclopædia been produced at a price which no sensible farmer will grudge as a necessary business expense—12 handsome volumes at 8s. each.

The Next Thing in Liners

ENGLISH and American publishers who are so often crossing the Atlantic will be interested to hear from that fascinating monthly, The World's Work, that, "whatever may be the naval position of the British Empire to-day, it is refreshing to feel that in the matter of ocean liners (which are convertible for war purposes), at any rate, we are in a position to say that supremacy can only be wrested from us by a superhuman effort of our rivals. In this matter the pace has been set to the Germans, and preparations are in hand to make it still hotter." The May number contains an intensely interesting description of these ocean mammoths, and the writer also indicates startling possibilities of the near future:—

"Has finality been attained in shipbuilding? It was at first popularly considered that the two Cunard liners represented the limits of the shipbuilders' art. But far from it. Lord Pirrie, the guiding hand of the fortunes of Harland and Wolff, who has accomplished great things, stated that he was quite prepared to build a thousand-foot liner of 50,000 tons. It was merely a question of money—and harbour accommodation. He urged those responsible for the maintenance of harbours to display initiative and take time by the forelock, as such a liner was bound to come. The advice has been taken to heart, and preparations in this direction are in active progress both sides of the Atlantic. The first step has been made towards this ideal, for the Belfast firm have under way two huge leviathans, the Titanic and Olympic, which in two years time will flutter a sensation throughout the world on account of their huge dimensions. To effect their realisation, the builders have expended a round quarter of a million of money in preparing their slips. That they will rank as no passing achievement of the shipbuilders' craft is borne out by the fact that already rumours of still larger vessels are in the air, and it only requires commercial confidence to bring about their realisation. If exigencies demand—well, the builders are ready."

Haileybury College, Past and Present

THE Rev. L. S. Milford's book, "Haileybury College, Past and Present," will be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin on May 17th. Mr. Milford, who is both a Haileybury master and an old Haileybury boy, has been successful not only in collecting a large amount of information about the history of the school, but in putting it into an attractive form, and his book is likely to interest many readers besides O.H.'s. There are chapters dealing with every side of the school life—work and play; there are short biographies of the masters, of distinguished Haliburians, and about forty-six illustrations. That there is a humorous element might be expected. As the author says in his introduction, "school nowadays is so full of pleasantness that it is difficult 'not to be jolly.'" Our public Schools and Colleges are among the nation's most valuable assets.

"Elements of Dutch"

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL have published a seventh edition, thoroughly revised and enlarged, of "Elements of Dutch," by Dr. J. M. Hoogvliet, Lecturer of the Utrecht University. It is in two parts, Part I. dealing with "The Language and its Grammar," Part II. being an Anthology and a most useful Dutch Dictionary. Dr. Henry Sweet, Professor of English Language and Literature at Oxford, speaks very highly of this work, which will be found most useful to business men as well as all interested in art and literature. It is well printed, well arranged, and attractively got up generally, and is published, we are glad to see, at a net price—i.e., 3s. 6d. net.

BIRMINGHAM

While making a purchase in one of the larger bookseller's shops of Birmingham the other day, I happened to notice a cheap edition of a novel the dramatised version of which had recently been played at one of the theatres. It caused me to ask a question about the effect of such performances on the sales of fiction. I was rather surprised to learn how great that effect was. My informant said that during the week and the few days before and after the appearance of Mr. Oscar Asche and his company in "Count Hannibal," there was a very big rush for that work of Mr. Stanley Weyman. The firm in question made a feature of it, and no fewer than 600 copies were sold in a few days—mostly, of course, of the cheaper reprints. When other plays founded on novels had been reproduced there had been similar booms in the sales, and it was curious to note that the impulse given at the time continued to show its influence for a month or two afterwards. My informant suggested that this was caused by people who saw the play buying the novel, and then recommending it to their friends from time to time.—A correspondent to the Birmingham Daily Mail.

DORKING

Mr. Geo. Meredith, the great novelist, died at his residence, Flint Cottage, near Box Hill, on Tuesday last. Further particulars are given elsewhere in this issue.

DUBLIN

John Larkin and Joseph Larkin, brothers, were indicted for having stolen 103 postage stamps from the premises of Mr. James Tallon, bookseller, Grafton Street. The first named pleaded guilty and was put back.

Opening the case against Joseph Larkin, Mr. Bushe referred to the manner in which Mr. Tallon's premises had been entered by a skylight and the desk searched and the stamps removed. The men were seen slinking through the streets at 2 o'clock in the morning, and when challenged by a policeman they made the remarkable statement that they were "out looking for cigarettes." They were placed under arrest, and the first thing they did was to proceed to assault the policeman. So violent did they become that civil aid had to be called in to get them to the station. When there, a search showed that John Larkin had a large quantity of stamps on him, and also an envelope bearing the name and address of Mr. Tallon, bookseller, Grafton Street. The letter was from the well-known firm of Messrs. Chatto & Windus, and it would be proved that it was written by a Mr. Ward, who had attended as a witness. Mr. Bushe closed by producing two types of "jemmies," which were also found on the prisoners.

Constable 126 C deposed to meeting the two men in Britain Street between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning. He was suspicious of them, and proceeded to arrest them for loitering. There was a struggle, and the subsequent details corroborated the opening statement of Mr. Bushe.

Inspector Patrick M'Cabe deposed to examining the skylight and the desk, and on the latter there were marks into which the "jemmies" fitted.

Mr. F. S. Ward, of Messrs. Chatto & Windus, identified the envelope which was found on John Larkin.

The defence was an alibi.

The jury disagreed, and the prisoner was put back for a new trial.—The Evening Herald.

GLASGOW

Messrs. E. J. Arnold & Son, Ltd., notify the trade that their branch in this city will be open as usual during the Whitsuntide holidays.

LEEDS

Messrs. E. J. Arnold & Son, Ltd., give notice that their factory and warehouse in this city will be closed from 12.30 p.m. on Saturday, May 29th, 1909, until the morning of the following Wednesday, June 2nd, 1909.

NORWICH

Messrs. Goose & Son, of 19, Rampant Horse Street, Norwich, have purchased the business of Mr. W. A. Nudd, of the Haymarket, Norwich, and intend to shortly transfer their bookselling department to the latter address.

RUGBY

The book trade here is very ordinary, in fact one might say quite dull. Apart from the 7d. novels there is little of importance in demand at the present time. An interesting book is announced by a resident here, and one well known to the literary world, Mr. Norman Gale, author of "A Country Muse" and other works. The book will consist of a hundred quatrains, the edition being limited to 350 signed and numbered copies.

This book has a peculiar history. About 15 months ago the author sent it to a London publisher, who accepted it with eagerness and then locked it up in his safe and apparently lost sight of it. Seeing no signs of activity Mr. Gale made a request for the return of the MSS., and forthwith decided to be come a publisher.

WALLINGFORD

Two well-known novelists played a prominent part in a disastrous farm fire which broke out in the early hours of Monday morning, says The Daily Mail.

Goulds Grove, the picturesque home of Mr. Jerome K. Jerome, stands in close proximity to a farm belonging to Mr. Roadnight. About two in the morning he was aroused to find that the whole of the farm buildings and well-stocked yard adjoining the house were on fire. Mr. Jerome and Mr. Pett Ridge, who was spending the week-end with his friend, guided the rest of the family to a place of safety and then rendered yeoman service in helping to rescue the live stock in the burning buildings.

Mr. Jerome's billiard-room and its contents were destroyed, but the remainder of the house was saved. Fifty pigs, calves, poultry, and a large quantity of implements and ricks were destroyed.

Letters to the Editor

The Sevenpenny Novel in Cloth

DEAR SIR,—It is really delightful to see THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR in a rage, and I do not suppose Mr. Bathurst and myself are one penny the worse; but why call us Anarchists? In the letters to which I have appended my name in The Bookseller I have studiously refrained from using hard words. It may please you to call me an Anarchist, but it would be no satisfaction to me and would not help forward the cause I have at heart if I were to call anybody names. We live in London, not Eatanswill, and gentlemen should differ in opinions without being personal in their language. Your tirade against coercion is really amusing, because all the coercion I am conscious of at the present time is the coercing of an overwhelming majority by a very small minority.

I happened to be one of five-and twenty publishers sitting round a table in Stationers' Hall in November last. Those five-and-twenty men agreed to a certain line of action. I have urged most respectfully that that resolution should have been carried out in the spirit and the letter by those who were a party to it, and for doing this you dub me an Anarchist! If you must apply names, should you not post this particular appellation to another address?

You may say your article is a protest against any attempt on the part of the Publishers' Association to compel their members to publish their books at a certain price. Nobody has ever made such a suggestion, and in your heart you know it. All I ask is that during the difficult times through which we are passing we should all "play the game."—Yours faithfully,

ARTHUR SPURGEON.

La Belle Sauvage, E.C.
May 20th

[Mr. Spurgeon "knows in his heart" we did not call him an Anarchist. He knows perfectly well that it would produce Anarchy in the Publishers' Association if the policy of attempting to turn out members over this 7d. book question were adopted. It almost looks as if he did not know that with the exception of Messrs. Longmans and one or two others there is hardly a firm of novel publishers, including Messrs. Cassells, who have not supplied, or tried to supply, Messrs. Nelson, Collins, &c., with copyright novels for issue as 7d. cloth volumes. How can they with any conscience now turn round and rend Messrs. Nelson, Macmillan, Collins, Hurst and Blackett, &c.? We have mentioned no names, and do not know why Mr. Spurgeon should put the cap on, but he cannot deny that certain firms have been plainly told they ought to leave the Association or give in to the views of some of its members on this 7d. cloth novel question. We do not imagine that Mr. Spurgeon urged such a policy as that—in fact, we have never had him in mind in what he amusingly dubs our "rage."—ED.]

The Price of Novels

DEAR SIR,—In the interesting controversy as to the price of novels which has ruffled the publishing and bookselling world in the past few weeks, one point of some importance to the book-reading public has been left out of account, namely—the size of the book.

Ought the publishers not to come to an agreement with regard to the minimum number of words which a novel at a certain price should contain? What is the present range of, say, the 6s. novel? At a rough guess, I should say anything between 60,000 and 250,000 words. Now, why can there not be a sliding scale, as, I believe, is the case in Germany and in that of other English books? Take, for instance, two of the biggest and, from the literary point of view, most important novels of the past year—Mr. Bennett's "Old Wives' Tale" and Mr. Richardson's "Maurice Guest." Could one imagine either of these being published for the first time at 7d., or even at 2s.?

The question is rather—would not the public, which pays its 4s. 6d. for the popular novel of 100,000 words, that it throws away after a single reading never to take up again, not be prepared to pay more for books of greater size and more serious literary claims?—I am, yours faithfully,

R. A. SIMPSON.

Wimbledon.

The Booking Fee Question, &c.

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent "Publisher's Trade Manager" does not show much sympathy with the booksellers whose great need is for better terms. There would be some force in his remarks and in his "delicate suggestion" if all books were published net, if instead of getting less than 10 per cent. gross profit we got 20 per cent.

The contract with the carrier is not as favourable as perhaps some imagine, for the carrier, anticipating the carrying of a large number of parcels, charges accordingly; and further, overweights are by no means inconsiderable—at least that is our experience. As to returns being sent carriage forward, if the goods were sent "on sale" by arrangement with the booksellers I thought it was the rule that the latter should pay the carriage on any returns. In that case the sending of the parcel by their usual carrier does not affect the publishers. Otherwise, P.T.M. has, I think, a real grievance. Certainly if the publishers have to pay carriage on any returns the parcel should be forwarded by the method that is to them the cheapest.

The following additional firms do not charge the booking fee on parcels of under 5s. net:—James Clarke & Co., A. C. Fifield, T. N. Foulis, L. Upcott Gill, Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd. The last-named excepts magazines.

We shall keep this list and last week's list before our ordering clerk, and save the booking fee whenever we can, and also secure the settlement discount by sending direct to the publishers concerned.

It will be gratifying to me if my fellow-booksellers also reap some advantage by the consideration of this subject, for which you have so kindly found space. Permit me, in conclusion, to express my thanks for Mr. Rawlings' letter.—Yours faithfully,

H. R. FIRMIN.

Cardiff.

"A Dickens Dictionary"

DEAR SIR,—In a recent number of The Athenæum the "Dickens Dictionary" was severely criticised. The editor, however, refuses to insert my reply to his reviewer.

The "Dickens Dictionary" is an analysis of more than seven millions of words and gives upwards of twelve thousand references, and must contain some errors of omission and commission which I hope to correct in future editions. But under the circumstances I would beg the favour of a short space in your columns to correct misconceptions that may exist regarding the book. A few of these are summarised below.

(1) The Athenæum says: "For a 'Dickens Dictionary,' if it is to justify its title, a judicious blending of the qualities both of index and concordance is essential," and states that words and phrases should have been included.

"Dictionary" is a term describing alphabetical arrangement, and the reviewer's definition has no foundation. The scope of the work is defined on the title page as "The characters and scenes of the novels and miscellaneous works alphabetically arranged."

(2) The reviewer states that "Mr. Carker the Junior is cited as Mr. Carker Junior." This celebrated character is entered under Carker Junior, Mr. John.

(3) The reviewer objects to the arrangement of the "mysterious" letters P.J.T.; but they are correctly placed according to the best rules of alphabetical order.

(4) The Athenæum goes on to state that "there is no reference to 'Edwin Drood' at all . . ."; but on referring to the book it will be seen that the better part of a column is devoted to Edwin Drood.

(5) With regard to the originals, of which there are some hundreds never before presented in a collected form, the reviewer says: "The wildest of conjectures from a miscellaneous collection of press cuttings are included." These originals, however, do not include any "conjectures," but are founded on the best authorities, and where, even under these circumstances, an original appears open to doubt, the fact is noted.

Thanking you in anticipation, I am yours faithfully,

ALEX. J. PHILIP.

[So far as we have been able to test Mr. Philip's work it strikes us as one which everyone interested in Dickens ought to be thankful for. It must have been an immense labour, and although it does not profess to be complete or perfect, there is no other work which gives anything like the same amount of information. We confess we cannot understand why any paper should refuse to allow an author-compiler at least to reply where absolute mis-statements have been made by a reviewer. We think Mr. Philip has just cause for his complaint.—ED.]

Notices of Books

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—"Quaint Subjects of the King," by John Foster Fraser. We Britishers know but little about the vast and distant dominions belonging to this country, and have but scanty notion of the appearance and manners of many of the dark subjects of our King. This book contains seventy-eight illustrations, sixty-eight being full-paged, taken from photographs of our Aboriginal fellow-subjects, such as the Australian blackfellow, the tattooed native of New Guinea, and of many other quaint people. The author is to be congratulated on the thoroughness of his work, to which he must have given an immensity of labour.

From the Same.—"Lace Making and Collecting," by A. Penderel Moody. The object of this book is to teach the reader how to identify some of the well-known laces, and especially how to detect forgeries. The confined space of the book does not permit an exhaustive treatment of any particular subject, but it should give the reader a good insight into the lace-making industry, to the revival of which in this country Miss Moody and a few other ladies have devoted themselves. The cheap price at which this little book is published brings it within the reach of all. It contains sixteen good illustrations.

From Mr. John Currie (16, Teviot Place, Edinburgh).—"The Pocket Prescriber," by James Burnet. This little work is intended to aid students in their dispensary practice and to encourage them in the art of prescription writing. The contents include:—Aphorisms, Incompatibilities, Prescriptions, Useful Recipes and Index of Diseases. A handy and undoubtedly useful book.

From Mess s. G le & Polden.—"Guide for Officers and N.C.O.'s of the Territorial Forces, with Specimen Examination Papers," by Captain J. Atkinson. This neat little handbook is uniform with the "Guide for Officers, &c., of the A.S.C. (T.F.)" by the same author, published a short time ago, and deals fully with conditions of service, schools of instruction, training and annual training in camp in the various arms of the Territorial Forces, with reference to the official publications, which naturally deal with these matters at considerable length and in which it is often difficult to unearth information on some points. The book also includes much useful information on technical subjects.

From Messrs. Novello & Co.—"Hymns and Songs for Empire Day, with a Short Form of Service for use in Schools or in Church." A useful little manual for use on Empire Day, especially in schools. There should be a large sale for it.

From Messrs. John Ouseley, Ltd.—"The Seven Stages of Golf, and other Golf Stories in Picture and Verse." The verses are by Harold Simpson, and some twenty-one humorous illustrations in colour by G. E. Shepheard. A capital book, which should be appreciated; Mr. Shepheard's illustrations are the most amusing we have seen for a long time in connection with the fascinating and delightful game—he is specially good on its miseries.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co.—"Songs of Solitude," by Maurice Taylor. Throughout this new "Collection of Verse," we realise the writer's sincere and poetic feeling for nature. The poems that have pleased us best are:—"Childhood's Garden," "The Rivals," "To a Canary," and "Autumn," a sonnet, for they possess an abiding charm and melody as metrical compositions.

Messrs. Ralph, Holland & Co. have issued the seventh book of their "Scientific Geography" series, being "The British Empire," by E. W. Heaton, F.G.S. The book is intended to be suggestive rather than exhaustive. The Colonies are treated in the order in which they occur along the great Trade Routes, and there are excellent diagrams and maps.

The best selling Gift Books are Colour Books.

The best selling Poem in the English language is "The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám."

Hence an edition of "Omar," artistically produced wholly in colour, is assured of success. No care nor expense has been spared to make

The Fitzgerald CENTENARY EDITION of the

RUBÁIYÁT OF OMAR KHAYYÁM

Illustrated by Willy Pogany

a beautiful piece of work, and we believe the general verdict will be that it is astonishingly good value, as a perusal of the special features detailed below will indicate. The text is Fitzgerald's First Edition.

SPECIAL FEATURES—

STYLE.—Every page in this book is the work of the artist—cover, end-papers, ornamental borders, initials, title-page, and even the text, which is drawn to imitate the Arabic character. No two pages are alike, and each is lithographed in at least two colours. In addition, there are twenty-four full-page illustrations in full colour mounted upon a suitable paper with plate-marked impression.

SIZE.—Imperial Octavo—11 by 7½ inches.

ORDINARY EDITION.—This is half bound with special cover design in four colours and gold. 10/6 net. Also bound in full Velvet Persian, yapp, boxed, 17/6 net.

LIMITED EDITIONS.—(a) There will be 500 copies printed on Japon vellum and numbered and signed by the Artist, with the plates specially produced. Bound in a new cloth, with special design, 21/- net. Also bound in full Velvet Calf, yapp, boxed, 30/- net. "English Literature in the Nineteenth Century"*

SENT out into the world of books with the good taste we are accustomed to from Mr. Andrew Melrose, with an excellent index, this new essay in criticism by Mr. Laurie Magnus, M.A., comes at an opportune time. It is dedicated by permission to George Meredith, and it deals mainly with his contemporaries.

Mr. Magnus has the courage to say what he thinks, and this gives a zest to his criticisms which is often wanting in work of this kind. The attempt to place every chief name in English literature of the Nineteenth Century is a bold one, and it will be considered to have succeeded or failed in the measure that it falls in with, or out with, the inclinations of the reader. Although Mr. Magnus says what he thinks, it is often done in such a delicate and skilful manner that it is not until you have twice read what he says (about Tennyson, for instance) that you find his whole criticism is destructive. For him it would seem that the beauty of the song in "The Princess" depends completely on a meticulous triumph of skill—no soul, no message, nothing but sound, "not touched by informing genius or the vital Pygmalion spark." He does not hesitate to refer to the qualities of inconsequence and banality, even vulgarity, which "persisted through all Tennyson's poetry."

In this judgment not only will "devout Tennysonians" differ from him, but also ordinary mortals, who feel that the world is better, the British Fleet and the love of England stronger, and ideals of manhood and womanhood finer for Tennyson's work. Mr. Magnus looks upon Tennyson as the poet of his own time and the time behind him.

> The Fleet of England is her all in all.
> Her Fleet is in your hands,
> And in her Fleet, her fate.

Mr. Clement Shorter's "Literary Letter" in The Sphere is always amusing. Usually he flutters like a bee from literary flower to literary flower, sipping here and tasting there. His motto is "I am a man of letters, and nothing literary is uninteresting to me." In The Sphere for May 22nd he says:—

> "Who is the author of 'Musings Without Method' in Blackwood's Magazine? I have heard the article associated with a man of some culture once associated with Oxford University, but I decline to believe it. Whoever he may be, he is obviously a snob. I have often thought that I should like to write an article on 'The Snob in Literature.' The author of these 'Musings' is an excellent type."

Many others beside Mr. Shorter have often wondered who did the interesting "Musings" in Maga. It is not often that Mr. Clement Shorter stings like that, and we wondered what could possibly have drawn out such a harsh note in the music of The Sphere. It seems that the writer of "Musings" has been, according to Mr. C. K. S., very rude to the Omar Khayyám Club, imputing to them, for one thing, a belief in the "Shakspere-Bacon folly," as Mr. S. calls it. Mr. Shorter goes on—

> "We know that the crude people who accept that craze are never likely to have read Fitzgerald's poem. Not one of them could possibly obtain election to the Omar Khayyám Club. The author of 'Musings' knows this very well, but he aspires to shine with the smart insincerity now so prevalent."

It is very amusing to find Mr. Shorter calling Mr. Musings a snob for being rude to the Omarians and then he himself is ruder still to the Baconians, for they have not snubbed Omar. Suppose Tennyson's friend "Old Fitz" appeared at the Omar Club one day, would they let him in? He might rebuke them with a verse from Tennyson's "Literary Squabbles" and remind them how—

> One small touch of charity
> Could lift them nearer God-like state
> Than if the crowded Sphere should cry
> Like those who cried Diana great.

Mr. Magnus is probably also not eligible as a member of the Omarians, for he says, "Posterity will probably judge that the merits of the 'Rubaiyat' have been over-estimated during the last twenty years, as it has judged already the rest of Fitzgerald's scanty writings."

We believe that a mark of not being eligible for the Omar Club is to add a definite article to "Rubaiyat" and to give "Khayyám" without the accent.

What is a "Man of Letters"? Mr. Magnus says, Lord Houghton (Monckton Milnes), "although he wrote some admirable verse and not a little good criticism," was "a focus of letters rather than a man of letters."

The latest adherent of the Baconians is one of the most famous men of our time, Mark Twain. His new book, "Is Shakespeare Dead?"† is, we were astonished to find, a serious and clever attack on the Man of Stratford! Lots of people will never believe Mark Twain is in earnest; but he is terribly in earnest in this book and mighty bitter about the Shakespearians.

We have heard what the writer of "Musings Without Method" is called by Mr. Shorter; it will be interesting to hear what the Unknown of Maga will say when he focusses his attention on The Sphere.

Mr. Magnus has some pleasant references to the relations of authors and publishers, and, while regretting the decease of Fraser, Temple Bar, Longman's and Macmillan's Magazines, wonders if Tit-Bits and The Strand Magazine are "fully adequate in compensation."

The exceptional demand for Mr. Newte's very successful "purpose" novel "Sparrows: the Story of an Unprotected Girl," continues unabated, and a further impression (making the fourth) is now being prepared by Messrs. Alston Rivers.

* "English Literature in the Nineteenth Century: an Essay in Criticism," by Laurie Magnus, M.A., author of "Introduction to Poetry," &c. (London Andrew Melrose).

† London and New York: Harper Brothers.

Another Attack on Shakespeare

NEW books on the theory that ascribes the Shakespeare plays to the pen of Francis Bacon are apt to be ridiculed by all except the Baconians. This, Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. state—

"will certainly not be the case with a work by William Stone Booth on 'Some Acrostic Signatures of Francis Bacon.' Mr. Booth was at one time a strong supporter of the Shakespearean authorship. The object of the book is to remove for all time from the realm of surmise the question of the authorship of the writing now attributed to Shakespeare; and to show that Bacon himself, sometimes collaborating with his brother Anthony, put forth or composed several important works ascribed in his time, and since, to his fellow poets Spenser and Marlowe, and to Puttenham and Bodenham. Mr. Booth has made careful examination of many books of the Elizabethan period, and has gathered together about 250 acrostic signatures. Fully two hundred are illustrated by facsimile pages of the earliest editions."

Notes and Announcements

PUBLISHERS will doubtless be interested in an article by Mr. W. Morris Colles, entitled "Copyright at Home and Abroad," which will appear in The Nineteenth Century and After for June.

Admirers of Mrs. Frances Blundell's writings will look forward with pleasure to reading "Galatea of the Wheatfield," which may best be described as an open-air idyll, even though Tabitha Bolt, the heroine, finds her way to London, and is even introduced into fashionable society. The Pygmalion of the story is an Oxford Undergraduate, and much of the interest in the book centres in the difficulties in which he finds himself involved, owing to his action in withdrawing the beautiful rustic from her original sphere. The publishers are Messrs. Methuen.

Mark Twain's new book, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" is described as a serious book full of humour—a real contribution, in the guise of fun, to the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy in favour of Bacon. Messrs. Harpers are the publishers.

"The Lady in the White Veil," by Rose O'Neill, with illustrations by the author, a love story told in a series of humorous episodes, is announced for immediate publication (Harpers).

Messrs. Methuen announce a work by Mr. Alfred Harker, entitled "The Natural History of Igneous Rocks."

An interesting study of George Meredith's work and of his influence on modern English fiction is to be found in Mr. E. J. Bailey's "The Novels of George Meredith," published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.

Publishers and authors, and newspapers which publish serial fiction, will have heard with dismay of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Jones v. Hulton & Co., Ltd. The plaintiff's name is Artemus Jones, and the defendants published a story with a character of that name quite innocently and having no reference to the plaintiff, and yet he has been awarded £1,750 damages. We see the case is to go to the House of Lords, and the result will be watched with interest, but what a satire it is on our judicial proceedings that clients may spend thousands in fighting such cases.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have just added to their Cr. 8vo 3s. 6d. edition of the novels of the late F. Marion Crawford "A Lady of Rome" and "Arethusa."

With the issue dated May 29th, The Saturday Journal will be permanently enlarged to 32 pages, and will contain many new and attractive features, and a fine plate in colour.

On June 10th, the opening day of the Church Pageant at Fulham, Messrs. Mowbray will publish at 1s. net, "Everyman's History of the English Church," by the Rev. Percy Dearmer.

The subject of Mr. Albert Kinross' new novel, "The Lovebrokers," is our marriage laws and marriage lawyers—particularly the latter. The book is published by Messrs. Cassell.

A volume which will be of great interest at the present moment will be published immediately under the auspices of the Seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry, now being held in London. This work will be entitled, "The Rise and Progress of the British Explosives Industry," and has been compiled by members of the Explosives Section of the Congress. It contains numerous illustrations of historical interest and portraits of several of the pioneers in the British Explosives Industry, and will be published by Whittaker & Co.

Mr. Ch. J. Bishenden, author of many popular books on his method for "Voice, Singing and Health," has written a new book of Vocal, &c., reference, to be published by E. J. Larby, Paternoster Avenue, E.C.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons will publish on Monday a new edition (the 15th) of Bates' popular "Cyclopædia of Illustrations of Moral and Religious Truths."

Admirers of the novels of Arthur Applin will be pleased to hear of a new one from his pen dealing with the stage, entitled "The Stage Door," which is announced for immediate publication by Stanley Paul & Co. The same publishers announce from the pen of G. B. Burgin, a new novel entitled "The Trickster," dealing with the matrimonial adventures of Lady Selina.

An important new work by Miss A. Penderel Moody, author of "Devon Pillow Lace," has just been published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., entitled "Lace Making and Collecting: an Elementary Handbook." This book teaches the first steps in all the well-known laces, and points out the distinctions between real, faked and imitation laces. It is profusely illustrated.

The Baroness Orczy's new series of stories, which start in Cassell's Magazine for June, will be entitled "The Adventures of Lady Molly of Scotland Yard." The author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel" has a strong opinion that the Criminal Investigation Department should employ women detectives for the elucidation and detection of all crimes in which women have had a hand. Of course, there is nothing new in the employment of women as detectives; but we regret that a woman should advocate such work for women.

"Sacred Subjects Illustrated in Sculpture" is the title of a series of over thirty collotype reproductions from the finished works of James Forsyth and J. N. Forsyth, edited by J. N. Forsyth, sculptor, to be published shortly by the authors at 335, Finchley Road, Hampstead. Mr. J. Forsyth says "the book is going well. Usual terms for orders"; which, we presume, means usual trade terms.

Cricketers who remember "Cricket on the Brain" will be interested to learn that the author has projected a new food for thought. This is published by Messrs. Jarrold & Sons under the title of "Cricket at the Breakfast Table."

Messrs. Rebman announce a second impression of "The Romance of a Nun" by Alix King.

"The Modern Mother: A Guide to Girlhood, Motherhood and Infancy," by Dr. H. Lang Gordon, is one of Mr. Werner Laurie's new books.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., publish a work by the Rev. Percy Dearmer, entitled "Body and Soul." It is addressed to that large group of readers who are interested in the mysterious relation between mind and matter, between body and soul, and particularly to the smaller, but by no means insignificant section, which desires to know what Christian basis there is for the doctrine and practice of healing. Mr. Dearmer gives the history of faith healing from the primitive ages of the Church in the light of the latest scientific knowledge.

"The Red-Hot Crown" is the sensational title of Dorothea Gerard's new novel to be published by Mr. John Long.

A new anthology is announced by the Oxford University Press for publication very shortly—"The Englishman in Italy: being a collection of verses written by some of those who have loved Italy," arranged by Mr. G. H. Wollaston. It is uniform in appearance with the Oxford books of English and French Verse.

English architects of bridges will be specially interested in a great French work now being published by M. Ch. Beranger (Rue des Saints-Pères, 15, Paris), entitled "Études sur les Ponts en Pierre remarquables par leur Decoration Anterieurs au XIX. Siècle." It will be in five large fully illustrated volumes, of which one at least will be devoted to English, Spanish and Italian stone bridges. The volumes will be sold separately.

Messrs. Sealy, Bryers & Walker will shortly issue a new edition of James Murphy's historical novel, "The House in the Rath" (2s., cloth). "Paul Farquhar's Legacy: a Tale of the Rand," by John G. Rowe; "The Luck of the Kavanagh's," by C. J. Hamilton; "The Honour of the Desboroughs," by Rita Richmond; and "The Strike" by T. A. Rooney—the four latest additions to the Sixpenny Irish Library of Fiction—will shortly be issued. New works in the press are "Ireland's Great Future," by C. J. Smith; "The Irish Land War of 1760," by F. J. Bigger, M.R.I.A.; "De Libris" by Rev. F. J. Grierson; "The Mad Lord of Drumkeel," by John Sherlock.

We have received from Messrs. Kelly & Sons, of Water Street, W.C., an impression of a finely cut block of the Papal Arms, the measurements of which are about 3 by 2½ inches. They have recently added it to their stock for use in stamping the sides of books, presentation addresses and albums. They will be pleased to forward an impression of it to anybody likely to be interested in such a thing.

The Associated Booksellers

Tenth Annual Meeting of the Eastern Branch.

THE tenth Annual Meeting of this Branch took place on Tuesday, the 25th inst., at Sudbury. There were present Mr. W. E. Harrison (Ipswich), Chairman; Mr. F. R. Hockliffe (Bedford), Treasurer; Messrs. R. Bowes and A. Earnshaw Smith (Cambridge) and Mr. B. R. Marten (Sudbury). Mr. G. H. Tyndall (Ely), Secretary, was prevented from being present through temporary illness.

There had only been one meeting during the year, to consider an important question referred to the branches by the Central Council, so that there was very little business for the meeting; but £5 was voted to the Central Association, and a kindly recognition made of the regular attendances of the local representatives at the London meeting. A strong feeling was expressed that steps should be taken to increase the number of members.

After the business was over Mr. B. R. Marten, who has been one of the most regular of attendants at the meetings, and his son devoted the remaining time to showing the party the main features of this interesting old town, among others the old maces and Mayor's chain, which Mr. Marten himself had worn as Chief Magistrate of the town. Before leaving the members were entertained at tea by Mrs. Marten.

National Book Trade Provident Society Meeting at Birmingham

THE Annual Meeting of the National Book Trade Provident Society was held on Friday evening, May 21st, at the Imperial Hotel, Birmingham. There was an exceptionally strong muster of members of the trade, both from London and the Provinces, Birmingham and district being well represented. Among those present were Mr. B. H. Blackwell (Oxford), who presided, Messrs. Young J. Pentland (Edinburgh), W. G. Anderson (Edinburgh), F. A. Denny, W. J. Barwick, H. E. Alden, F. J. Rymer, B. W. Matz, E. J. Cooper, W. H. Archibold, H. E. Wells, J. Farmer, J. H. Crocket, H. Clifford, J. D. Carpenter, J. G. Wilson, W. T. Tyrrel, H. A. Boning and S. P. Austin (London), G. H. Hector, F. W. Holland, Achilles Taylor, Davies, J. Ponting, Blackham, Junior, A. J. Featherstone, A. D. Woodhouse (Birmingham), H. S. Young and G. A. Bates (Liverpool), F. Hewson (Coventry), G. J. Gray (Cambridge), H. W. Chaundy, W. Hunt, F. J. Hauks (Oxford), Akehurst (Leamington), T. Hunt (Wellington College), and many others.

MR. B. H. BLACKWELL.

Mr. YOUNG J. PENTLAND read a letter from the President, Mr. A. M. S. Methuen, who keenly regretted his enforced absence owing to illness, expressed his pleasure at the progress the Society was making, and wished the members a successful meeting. In the absence of Mr. Methuen, Mr. Pentland proposed that Mr. B. H. Blackwell (the Treasurer) take the chair, a proposal which was at once heartily agreed to.

The SECRETARY read the notice convening the meeting. The minutes of the previous Annual Meeting were read, approved and signed. Letters of regret for absence were read from Mr. F. S. Thornton (Oxford), Mr. Johnson (Manchester) and Mr. Hodges (Constable & Co.)

Report and Balance Sheet

The CHAIRMAN, who was received with applause, said: Gentlemen, in rising to move the adoption of the Report and Balance Sheet, which are in the hands of members, I would first like to say that when the idea of meeting in Birmingham was proposed there was some hesitation about deciding to do so; but the very kind reception which the Sub-Committee met with at the hands of Birmingham friends removed all misgivings, and the presence here to-night of so many local friends proves that our fears were groundless. The meeting would have been much larger but for the hesitation on the part of the railway companies in granting facilities. They could not consider this affair as a picnic, and would not look upon it as a pleasure party, and so declined to grant any concession. We came to Birmingham because it was, so far as the Society is concerned, an almost barren land. I do not think there was a member anywhere in the district when it was first proposed that we should meet here. We hope before the close of these proceedings to be able to report that a large number of local booksellers have given in their names. (Hear, hear.) We have received several proposals already. (Applause.)

With regard to the Report, for the benefit of those who have not copies I would point out that the balance in hand at the end of 1908 was £1,141 8s. 4d. The advantage of holding an annual meeting some long time after the accounts are made up is that one is able to see what advances have been made since the close of the year. Since the end of 1908 we have invested some £250 more, and we have in hand from ordinary funds £140. (Applause.) Consequently, we shall be making further investments shortly. Then there is another matter. The London Committee had, on its own initiative and at its own risk, planned last year and published the first number of an annual, called which proved a great success. (Hear, hear, and applause.) Of course, for that we are not only indebted to the London Committee, but more especially to Mr. B. W. Matz—(applause)—who undertook the onerous duties of editor, which means much more than just sitting down with a blue pencil. A good deal of the work of securing contributions to the book was laid upon him, and we are very much indebted to him and also to the authors, artists, block makers and others who helped, either by gratuitious work or greatly reduced charges, to bring out The Odd Volume. A new number for next year is already planned and in course of production, and I hope we shall do a great deal better with it than we did with the first issue. I read the other day that of Printers' Pie 150,000 copies were taken up. If booksellers can sell 150,000 copies of Printers' Pie for the benefit of printers, surely they can do as much for an annual published for the benefit of members of their own trade. (Hear, hear.) I hope that next year we shall be able to report doubled sales. I have this day received from the secretary of the London Committee a cheque for £230 on account of the sales of The Odd Volume. That is a nice round sum, a substantial addition to the funds of the Society, and I understand we may look for a further balance later on. (Applause.) I should mention that we had previously received £20 from the same source, thus making £250 to date from The Odd Volume.

You will have noticed that Mr. Andrew Lang, at the dinner of the Royal Literary Fund, alluding to the sevenpenny novel (which is a burning question just now), said that if the reduction went on authors and publishers would have to come upon the provident associations. I imagine that what Mr. Lang says is to be taken cum grano salis. I have not been in the book trade more than forty years without hearing occasional jeremiads on the state of trade. I still have hope that the bookseller will be able to exist in spite of all of them. I believe there is a larger and increasing public for good literature, and it is better to sell a sevenpenny novel than to have persons borrowing from lending libraries. (Hear, hear.) You will see in the Report a list of donors and subscribers. Our best thanks are due to those firms and individuals who make up that list. There are many whose names are familiar in our mouths as household words. We sincerely hope that in future that list will be much longer. I think this Society has a very real claim upon the publishing houses and on booksellers generally. We all know, of course, that another society exists in London—an old-established and well-endowed society. An idea seems to be abroad that this Society is in some sense a rival of the Booksellers' Provident Institution. I cannot see that it is. The London society has been in existence for a good many years, but its work and interest are confined to a small radius centreing around St. Paul's Cathedral. Instead of being a rival, this Society is a necessary supplement to the London body. When you look at the difference in subscriptions it seems ridiculous to think that there can be any rivalry between the two societies. Of course, the National Book Trade Provident Society must include London, and we are very thankful for the work the London Committee has done and for the larger membership they have brought into existence; but it is open to all those members to join the other society also. The subscription to this Society is so small that those who can afford to pay the larger subscription required by the Booksellers' Provident Institution will not miss the extra few shillings. This Society was established more especially for the country trade, and it is to the cities and towns of the Provinces that we look for additions to our membership. We have every reason to be grateful for London, and hope it will go on in the good way it has begun; but we must not forget that it is in the country that we must look generally for recruits. (Hear, hear.)

There is one note of sadness which I must strike. But for the death lately of Mr. George Meredith, one of the greatest if not our greatest literary genius, the newly-elected President of the London Branch (Mr. W. M. Meredith) would have been with us to-night. All, I am sure, will agree with me in deploring the loss which Mr. Meredith has sustained, and will allow me to send in your name an expression of our sympathy with him on the death of his father.

The existence of this Society need call for no apology. I think we may consider it a provident society in the best sense, inasmuch as it provides for other people. I think that is a view we should take of this Society, that we are putting aside a little each year for the benefit of others. The Society offers three advantages. Firstly, it encourages thrift—if the putting by of 1½d. a week or 6d. a month may be dignified by such a name. Secondly, it brings the members together—(hear, hear)—which is, I think, a very valuable feature. I will explain for the benefit of those who have not seen the rules that when twenty members exist in any town or district they may form a local committee, elect a secretary and hold periodical meetings. Objection has been taken by some to this arrangement; they seem to think that some employers may look coolly upon their employees meeting their fellows in the trade. I think these employers may sleep soundly in their beds, for the last thing these young men are likely to talk about will be their business; and then again, no decent assistant would think of gossiping about his master's affairs. Thirdly, I have found that when the claims of the Society are put before people they are apt to look very coldly upon it, whereas, when once they have joined the Society they become most enthusiastic helpers in carrying on the work, and to this spirit of enthusiasm we must look largely for the proper development of the Society. I was struck one day by reading an anecdote concerning a gentleman who was travelling in an omnibus or tram car. In the same car was a Salvation Army captain, who asked the gentleman the question, "Did you ever go out of your way to do anybody any good?" That is a question which gives one to think. I am sure that our Committee and the members who have taken part in bringing the Society to its present position could answer this question most certainly in the affirmative. (Hear, hear.) When I look back through the minute book—as I did a few days ago—and see the immense amount of work put into the Society by these gentlemen, I think we may safely say that the Committee who from time to time have carried on the work have done so without any selfish aims. I think it is in that spirit we must go on if the Society is to attain its due position in the trade. (Hear, hear.) I trust this meeting will result in a big increase of members from this great industrial city. I have great pleasure in moving the adoption of the Report and Balance Sheet.

MR. YOUNG J. PENTLAND, who seconded, said: Gentlemen, after the very exhaustive statement which the Committee have placed before you, and the observations which Mr. Blackwell has made, there remains very little for me to say. I feel, however, that there are just one or two points which I should like to bring to the notice of members and prospective members of what we may shortly be able to speak of as the Birmingham Branch. (Hear, hear.) It was my good fortune seven years ago, together with Mr. Blackwell, Mr. Rymer and Mr. Bates, to be present in Birmingham at the first Annual Meeting of this Society. One looks back on that meeting with very mixed feelings. I remember it was only after considerable trouble that we were able to get together sufficient members to form a quorum. At that particular period, 1903, I think the funds of the Society were practically an unknown quantity. The second year we met in Edinburgh. The accounts were in an equally chaotic condition. We ascertained that the expenses had amounted to £57 5s. 9½d., while the cash in hand was £35 18s. 7d. The next year we were able, on the invitation of Mr. Blackwell, to meet at Oxford. The expenses amounted to £51 2s. 1½d., and the net balance to £167 0s. 9½d. The fourth year we met at Cambridge, and there we were able to report an expenditure of £18 1s. 2d. and a balance in hand of £332 7s. 10d. (Applause.) The fifth year we met in London. The expenses that year, according to the balance sheet, were £24 15s. 6d., but the Committee felt that, having regard to the small membership, it was not fair to burden the Society with such a large amount for expenses. Therefore certain of the members put their hands into their pockets and reduced the expenses to £14 11s. (Hear, hear.) The capital account that year amounted to £479 4s. 11d. The following year, again in London, the report showed expenses at £21 2s., and capital funds £679 5s. 8d. This year we have the pleasure of meeting in Birmingham. Our expenses, after the deduction of a small sum, are now £27 7s., and our capital is £1,141 8s. 4d. (Applause.) That is to December 31st, 1908. To-night, May 21st, our capital account, invested or in liquid assets, is £1,600. (Applause.) That includes the large contribution derived from the sales of The Odd Volume. I thought these statistics might be of some little interest to the friends in Birmingham who have joined or are thinking of joining the Society. The Committee have set before themselves as the object to be attained that they shall get every employer to become a life member. Life membership is acquired by a single payment of £5—not a very large sum for an employer to contribute. These five pounds, however, multiplied by a few hundreds, would give the Society a very considerable capital. The Committee has strenuously endeavoured not to encroach upon that capital account for current expenses. By our rules we are entitled to deduct, I think, 10 per cent. from capital for expenses, but to do this the Committee have felt would be bad finance. We have, therefore, endeavoured to keep expenses within the limit, and when we have exceeded that limit the custom has been to "send the hat round"—(hear, hear)—and invite a few individuals to make up the deficit. But this year we have been fortunate in getting from the London Branch a contribution of no less than £20 to be applied to special expenses of management of deficit account. In that fund we have between £19 and £20, so that for 1908 we have not encroached very largely on that contribution. While impressing upon new members the desirability of getting their employers to join, we must not overlook the fact that it is primarily to assistants that the benefits will go. It is only fair and reasonable that these young men should put their hands into their pockets to the extent of the six or seven shillings a year which the subscription amounts to. I think we have at the present time something like 590 ordinary members and 90 life members. That is a beginning. They are nothing like the numbers we may reasonably expect to get out of the book trade, which has shops in every city, town and village in the kingdom. I hope this meeting will mean the addition of between 50 and 60 members in Birmingham and district. I have always put down 1,000 to 1,500 as a reasonable membership to attain before we make any very definite appeal to the publishers. After all, we should look to the publishers for substantial contributions. It is to the members of the Society the publishers look for assistance in the distribution of their books. We might reasonably look to them for substantial help, either in the form of first and last donations or as annual subscriptions. If we had a hundred such subscribers we should with the capital in hand have the Society in a very strong position. I do not think I need trouble you further with finance and figures. I have much pleasure in seconding the adoption of the Report and Balance Sheet. (Applause.)

The resolution was carried unanimously.

Election of Officers

MR. BLACKWELL said that Mr. A. M. S. Methuen had been an excellent President and a substantial benefactor to the Society, and he had great pleasure in proposing his re-election as President. The proposal was at once agreed to by the meeting without a seconder being given an opportunity to speak.

MR. H. S. YOUNG, of Liverpool, proposed that Messrs. Young J. Pentland (Edinburgh), James H. Thin (Edinburgh), Frederick Macmillan (London), John Sampson (York), and R. B. Marston (London) be re-elected Vice-Presidents. This was, said Mr. Young, a very representative list, and the name of each of them was familiar to the members. Mr. L. D. Carpenter seconded, and the resolution was carried unanimously, and with applause.

Mr. B. W. MATZ said it was hardly necessary for anyone to propose that Mr. B. H. Blackwell be re-elected Treasurer. Mr. Blackwell had done sterling work for the Society, and since they had had the pleasure of meeting him more frequently in London they of the London Branch were quite sure that it would be impossible to secure anyone more strenuous or more competent for the post.

Mr. YOUNG seconded, and the vote was carried amid hearty cheers.

In acknowledging, Mr. Blackwell said that it was a great pleasure to him to occasionally meet the London Executive. They were an ardent active body and the Society was greatly benefited by the work they accomplished.

Mr. ANDERSON moved that Mr. Reginald W. Thornton be re-elected Secretary. Ever since London had become the headquarters of the Society Mr. Thornton had acted as Secretary, and he had done a good deal of work while holding the office. Under his secretaryship the Association had flourished, as they had heard from Mr. Pentland, and he did not think they could do better than re-appoint Mr. Thornton as Secretary for another term. The office entailed a great deal more work than they could really expect from any man for the remuneration given. If they wanted a reason why he did this work so readily he could give them one. Mr. Thornton was the son of a bookseller, and therefore took a very great interest in anything connected with the trade. In addition, he was an accountant, and therefore they had a great advantage in having him as Secretary.

Mr. W. J. BARWICK seconded, and the resolution was agreed to with applause.

Mr. THORNTON suitably acknowledged.

The CHAIRMAN, having explained that according to the rules the Committee consisted of twelve employers and twelve employees,

Mr. H. CLIFFORD proposed the election of the following gentlemen to the employers' section of the Committee, viz., Messrs. H. E. Alden (London), W. G. Anderson (Edinburgh), T. W. Chaundy (Oxford), F. A. Denny (London), John Macniven (Edinburgh), F. J. Rymer (London), James H. Thin (Edinburgh), F. S. Thornton (Oxford), H. S. Young (Liverpool) and George Brady (Manchester). Mr. Clifford spoke eloquently of the enthusiasm which these gentlemen had displayed in forwarding the aims of the Association, and Mr. Carpenter having seconded, their election was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. W. J. BARWICK, in characteristic manner, proposed the election to the employees' section of Messrs. W. H. Archibold (London), George A. Bates (Liverpool), T. A. Curtis (London), G. J. Gray (Cambridge), F. J. Hauks (Oxford), W. P. Hodges (London), B. W. Matz and J. G. Wilson (London), T. A. Wood (Oxford) and F. J. Johnson (Manchester), Mr. Barwick paused significantly after announcing each name, thus assuring for each nominee the recognition his services deserved.

The resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Cooper, was carried unanimously.

On the proposal of Mr. F. A. Denny, seconded by Mr. Archibold, Messrs. G. A. Bates and F. J. Rymer were unanimously re-elected Hon. Auditors.

With regard to the arrangements for the next Annual Meeting, it was decided to follow the practice of previous years and leave the matter in the hands of the Council.

Mr. YOUNG J. PENTLAND then proposed a vote of thanks to the local Secretaries—Messrs. G. J. Gray (Cambridge), David Haldane (Edinburgh), George A. Bates (Liverpool), W. H. Archibold (London) and W. Hunt (Oxford). These gentlemen, said Mr. Pentland, have worked most strenuously during the past year in whipping up new members and looking after the interests of the Society in general. He proposed that they accord to them a very hearty vote of thanks for their great service to the Society. (Applause.)

The vote was accorded with enthusiasm.

Mr. E. J. COOPER said he thought the Society did not get sufficient publicity. He proposed the appointment of an officer to devote especial attention to the securing of attention in the Press to the work and aims of the Society.

The CHAIRMAN explained that the matter would be carefully considered by the Council.

In moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Blackwell for presiding, Mr. F. A. Denny paid an eloquent tribute to the unselfish enthusiasm displayed by him in working for the Society.

Mr. COOPER seconded, and the vote was accorded with cheers.

Mr. BLACKWELL briefly responded.

The meeting then ended, and after a short interval the Smoking Concert commenced, with Mr. Frank Denny as Chairman, in which capacity he, at the request of some members, read extracts from the rules in order that the prospective new members might the more clearly understand the fundamental principles of the Society.

Mr. Denny also pointed out that the smallness of the Society's figures for expenses was due to the fact that Mr. Young J. Pentland relieved them of all cost of printing. (Applause.) The Society owed Mr. Pentland a deep debt of gratitude for his generosity. (Applause.)

MR. ANDERSON said he hesitated to keep the members longer from the concert, but after all it was a concert with a purpose. If he might speak on any one point it would be to show that, apart altogether from the benefits the members would themselves derive from the Society, they should not lose sight of the benefits that might accrue to those in whom they were interested. He always looked upon the benevolent as well as the provident side. They might provide to a certain extent for themselves, but he thought they should also endeavour to provide for the needs of those around them—(hear, hear)—and in joining that Society they were doing this in the easiest and best way. He thought this was a very much nicer way than sending round the hat. Another point he wished to refer to was one which, as an Edinburgh man, he was entitled to speak upon. Edinburgh was, he thought, the only city in the country, if not in the world, which had an Assistant Booksellers' Association. That Association had been in existence for 13 or 14 years, and had done much good for its members. There was not in Birmingham such an association. Why not make the local branch of the National Book Trade Provident Society a local society, which would enable them to meet one another and help one another? He thought Birmingham should found that night a branch of the Society. In Edinburgh they had, besides the Assistant Booksellers' Association, over 70 ordinary and 30 life members of this Society. He was sure that those who joined in Birmingham that night, either for their own sakes or for others, would never regret it.

At the Smoking Concert a programme of the highest order was provided and thoroughly enjoyed. The glees of Messrs. H. W. Chaundy, W. H. Sweatman, A. L. Smett, and J. Lomas (Magdalen College Choir, Oxford) received the hearty applause they merited, and the solos of each of these gentlemen were also musical treats. An outstanding feature in the concert was the humorous singing of Mr. Selwyn Driver, whose name is well known to London audiences. Mr. Selwyn Driver has, at the piano, a style quite his own, and it was evident that the booksellers know a good thing, for they encored every number contributed by him. The bass singing of Mr. F. Hewson, of Coventry, a member of the Society, also contributed not a little to the pleasures of the evening, and the efficient work at the piano of Messrs. C. H. Cooper and H. L. Smith was appreciated by both singers and audience.

New Members and a New Branch

At the Council Meeting, which preceded the General Meeting, 30 new members and 3 life members were elected, and donations from 3 annual subscribers received; while during the concert proposals were received for 32 ordinary and 7 life members. This information, given by the Chairman towards the end of the evening, created great enthusiasm, and as a result the Birmingham and District Branch was formed, with Mr. Davis and Mr. Poole, of the Midland Educational Co., as secretary and treasurer respectively. Both gentlemen in turn assured the meeting of their willingness to fill the posts and of their determination to make the new branch as successful and worthy as their abilities would allow.

A meeting of the Committee of Management was held at The Imperial Hotel, Birmingham, at 5.30 on Friday, the 21st inst.

Seven applications for life membership and thirty applications for ordinary membership were considered and approved.

The Treasurer reported the receipt of £230 from the London Committee as a donation from the proceeds of the Odd Volume and he was instructed to make a further investment of £350.

The Sevenpenny Copyright Novel in Cloth

To the Editor of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

DEAR SIR,—It is not so much Mr. Arthur Spurgeon's letter in your issue of the 22nd inst. that prompts me to ask for a little of your space as the editorial reply. I had never thought that your term "Anarchist" applied to myself or those who think with me. What we want is that a joint emergency committee should be appointed by the authors, publishers and booksellers, which can be convened at any time when schemes affecting the commercial side of literature are on foot. Were members of the various societies to be expected honourably to refer to their officials any new proposals, it could safely be left to such a committee to take action or not as the members think fit. Surely this policy does not savour of anarchism; and it possesses the advantage of practically abolishing the possibility in the future of any of the hole-and-corner "deals" to which all our troubles should rightly be attributed.

But what I really resent in your reply is the insinuation that all of us publishers have either supplied or tried to supply the sevenpenny publishing houses with our copyright novels. Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Spurgeon, and the rest of the Publishers' Circle are perfectly aware that my firm has not only never made any offers, but has never countenanced any proposals for sevenpenny rights. Whether we are in a position approaching isolation I very much doubt; but I do know that many publishers have granted the sevenpenny rights with the greatest reluctance, and Mr. Macmillan has openly stated that only the importunities of certain authors drove his firm into the sevenpenny fiction market.

The members of the most obscure firms have their feelings, and I must say that the suggestion that we have acted so inconsistently, to use a mild expression, is unworthy of a journal that professes to stand for fair play. I trust, therefore, you will allow me to put on record that the house of Alston Rivers has been dead against the sevenpenny cloth-bound novel from the first, and has never wavered in considering it a bad business proposition in every respect.

Yours &c.,
(Messrs. Alston Rivers, Ltd.)

[When we said "with the exception of Messrs. Longmans and one or two others, there is hardly a firm of novel publishers who have not supplied, or tried to supply Messrs. Nelson, Collins, &c., with copyright novels for issue as 7d. cloth volumes," we had before us a list of nearly a score of novel publishers, including nearly all the more important firms who have done so. What has the Hon. L. J. Bathurst to "resent" in our statement of this fact? If we had known that his firm had refused as definitely as Messrs. Longmans to supply copyright novels for the 7d. cloth issue we should have said so, but surely the "and one or two others" would cover his house. It is unnecessary for us to publish the names of the firms, they can easily be seen by anyone who looks up in the English Catalogue the names of the original publishers of works which have since been issued in the 7d. form in cloth by three or four houses. It is impossible in a trade paper to please all the conflicting interests, but we can say with truth that it has never been our intention to give offence. Our object is, without fear or favour, to do the best we can in the interests of the trade generally. Our negative assertion that the Publishers' Association is "not a Society of Anarchists," has been, perhaps not very sincerely, converted into a positive charge against certain members. What we are positive about is that if the policy advocated by our esteemed contemporary The Bookseller, viz., that certain firms should leave the Association because they wished to publish their books in their own way and at their own time, we say if that policy had been carried out officially by the Association it would have broken it up—and that would have been a disaster to the book trade far greater than anything this comparatively trivial sevenpenny question can inflict on it. Our contemporary says that we, in common with Mr. Frederick Macmillan, have mistaken and consequently misrepresented the point at issue—and it goes on: "The governing factor of the situation is not a mere question of allowing or of not allowing individuals to fix the prices at which they propose to publish individual books, but the acceptance or non-acceptance of a wholesale revolution in the hitherto recognised system of publishing novels," and it adds: "It is, in fact, exactly comparable with the working of the Net System." Our readers who have any experience of publishing and are acquainted with the question under discussion can judge for themselves as to whether The Bookseller or THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has been mistaken and made misrepresentations. In suggesting that certain firms of novel publishers ought to resign because other firms of novel publishers did not agree with the price or time at which they proposed to publish, The Bookseller made a great mistake, and it misrepresents the case entirely when it says it is "exactly comparable with the Net Book System." Any publisher can, although a member of the Association, bring his books out at any price he likes and make them net or not net just as he pleases—if he has signed the net book agreement naturally he is bound by it, but even then he need not make a single book net unless he likes. That is the vital difference which our contemporary so profoundly—does not understand.

Our contemporary says "If the great majority of the members are thus to allow themselves to be over-ridden by a small minority, the efficacy of the Association as an organisation for the benefit of the whole trade is already at an end." Our contemporary argues as if this question had come officially before the whole Association, that they had voted on it, and that a small minority had refused to resign. Why should they? They had broken no rules they had undertaken to keep, and they naturally refused to be dictated to as regards either the time or the price at which they should produce their books. Where is this great majority? Out of some ninety publishers about twenty met unofficially and expressed the pious hope that publishers of novels would do so-and-so. That was absolutely proper, and the only legal or hopeful way to get dissentients to come round to their views.

If they had done as The Bookseller advocates and said: Come over to us, or get out—well, obviously, a general meeting of the ninety members would have had to deal with the matter officially, and the great majority would certainly not have voted for the expulsion of important firms on a question affecting private rights of publishers, and one on which authors, publishers, and booksellers can, and do, hold diametrically opposite views. Mr. Andrew Lang says the 7d. novel spells ruin, Mr. Maurice Hewlett and other authors think it is a jolly good idea, and are buying more powerful motor cars on the results. Hang the 7d. edition—put it up in a shop window by the side of the dead 6s. edition. People won't have the latter at any price, and the former goes off gaily—and why should it not so long as the 6s. is dead, and has been dead two years at least? Hang it all, writing this long note has missed our train and spoiled our dinner, and "Serve you right" says our esteemed contemporary.—ED. P.C.]

Messrs. Cassell's Picture Exhibition at the Cutlers' Hall, May 24th to June 3rd

THE 27th Annual Exhibition of original drawings and paintings by well-known artists that have been reproduced in Messrs. Cassell & Company's numerous publications and art books during the year, was opened on Monday, May 24th at Cutlers' Hall, Warwick Lane, E.C., by the Lord Mayor (Sir G. Wyatt Truscott).

Tastefully arranged around the hall are 300 originals and over 150 photogravures and reproductions in full colours of old and modern masters—Vandyk, Hogarth, Phil May, Whistler, Leighton, and numerous others. The prints make a splendid display and form a striking example of what excellent pictures can be obtained for a few pence.

A noteworthy feature of the Exhibition is the series of water colour drawings by Mr. W. L. Wyllie, R.A., and a striking picture of "The Charge of the Light Brigade," by Mr. Christopher Clark, R.I.

The Lord Mayor was received by Sir Clarence Smith, Chairman of the Company, and a resolution of thanks to the Lord Mayor was seconded by Mr. W. A. Posnett. The Exhibition will remain open until June 3rd.

Samuel Pepys' Diary

THAT there should be such a book as Pepys's Diary is incomparably strange. Pepys, in a corrupt and idle period, played the man in public employments, toiling hard and keeping his honour bright. Much of the little good that is set down to James the Second comes by right to Pepys; and if it were little for a King, it is much for a subordinate. To his clear, capable head was owing somewhat of the greatness of England on the seas. In the exploits of Hawke, Rodney, or Nelson, this dead Mr. Pepys of the Navy Office had some considerable share. He stood well by his business in the appalling plague of 1666. He was loved and respected by some of the best and wisest men in England. He was President of the Royal Society, and when he came to die, people said of his conduct in that solemn hour—thinking it needless to say more—that it was answerable to the greatness of his life. Thus he walked in dignity, guards of soldiers sometimes attending him in his walks, subalterns bowing before his periwig; and when he uttered his thoughts they were suitable to his state and services. On February 8th, 1668, we find him writing to John Evelyn, his mind bitterly occupied with the late Dutch War, and some thoughts of the different story of the repulse of the Great Armada: "Sir, you will not wonder at the backwardness of my thanks for the present you made me, so many days since, of the Prospect of the Medway, while the Hollander rode master in it, when I have told you that the sight of it hath led me to such reflections on my particular interest, by my employment, in the reproach due to that miscarriage, as have given me little less disquiet than he is fancied to have who found his face in Michael Angelo's hell. The same should serve me also in excuse for my silence in celebrating your mastery shown in the design and draught, did not indignation rather than courtship urge me so far to commend them, as to wish the furniture of our House of Lords changed from the story of '88 to that of '67 (of Evelyn's designing) till the pravity of this were reformed to the temper of that age, wherein God Almighty found his blessings more operative than, I fear, He doth in ours His judgments."

This is a letter honourable to the writer, where the meaning rather than the words is eloquent. Such was the account he gave of himself to his contemporaries; such thoughts he chose to utter, and in such language; giving himself out for a grave and patriotic public servant. Here then, we have the key to that remarkable attitude preserved by him throughout his Diary, to that unflinching—I had almost said, that unintelligent—sincerity which makes it a miracle among human books. He was not unconscious of his errors—far from it; he was often startled into shame, often reformed, often made and broke his vows of change. But whether he did ill or well, he was still his own unequalled self; still that entrancing ego of whom alone he cared to write, and still sure of his own affectionate indulgence, when the parts should be changed, and the writer come to read what he had written.—From "Familiar Studies of Men and Books," by Robert Louis Stevenson.

Cricket in the Trade

CAXTON PUBLISHING COMPANY C.C. v. BLOOMSBURY C.C.

THE above match, played at St. Quintin's Park on Saturday last, resulted in a victory for the Caxton Publishing Co. C.C. by 22 runs. On the Caxton side Desages did well with both bat and ball, scoring 32 runs and taking 4 wickets for 18 runs. Harris also bowled well, taking 6 wickets for 20 runs. Scores:—Caxton Publishing Co. C.C., 87; Bloomsbury, 65.

PHILOTESIE C.C. v. MUDIES C.C.

THE above match, played at Devonshire Hill on Saturday last, resulted in a win for the Philotesie C.C., who scored 87 against their opponents 54. E. Race, playing in good style, scored 26 and also clean bowled 7 for 10 runs. W. Tacey and R. Stratton each made 10, B. Wilmot and L. Wilks 9 each. For Mudies C.C. H. King carried his bat for 19, and Hull took 6 wickets.

The Booksellers' Provident Institution

THE Monthly Meeting of the Board of Directors was held at 56, Old Bailey, E.C., on May 20th. Mr. C. J. Longman presided. Other members of the Board present were Messrs. C. A. Ashley (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd.), H. E. Barton (Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Ltd.), W. Bartram (Longmans, Green & Co.), J. R. Blade (Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Ltd.), W. H. Bull (Marshall Bros., Ltd.), J. Clark, E. H. Cooke (Geo. Philip & Sons, Ltd.), J. Cooper (W. & R. Chambers, Ltd.), Jas. Foster (Macmillan & Co., Ltd.), C. H. Hollingsworth (Macmillan & Co., Ltd.), F. J. James, W. H. Jelpke (Longmans, Green & Co.), G. H. Johnson (Reeves & Turner), W. A. Kelk (Longmans, Green & Co.), F. H. Lamb (Willing & Co., Ltd.), C. T. Langford (Macmillan & Co., Ltd.), F. Long (Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Ltd.), W. G. Reynolds (Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Ltd.), E. Shallis (Macmillan & Co., Ltd.), C. W. Whitaker (J. Whitaker & Sons, Ltd.), and the Secretary, Mr. George Larner.

A sum of £100 was voted towards the relief of members and widows of members.

The Misses A. J. and W. M. Spriggs, and Messrs. C. S. Brooks, John Murray (junr.), F. G. Smith and P. H. Upton-Jones were elected members of the Institution. Three further applications for membership were received.

The annual distribution under the terms of the will of the late Mrs. Frances Elizabeth Layton (known as "The Newman Trust," which is administered by the Board) was made, the amount divided amongst ten applicants being £16.

Another Warehouse Fire

BY a remarkable coincidence another large Bible warehouse has been greatly damaged by fire, this being the S.P.C.K. depôt, adjoining the Victoria Hotel in Northumberland Avenue. Shortly after six o'clock on Monday evening flames were seen issuing from the bottom of the lift shaft, where there is a gas engine, and although hand extinguishers were used, the fire spread with great rapidity. The lift shaft, which runs to the top floor, acted as a huge flue, and in a short time several floors had become involved. The fire brigade were called and arrived promptly, and a district call given when it was seen that the Hotel was endangered.

The employés acted with great presence of mind, and in a few moments all were out of the danger zone, and the iron fireproof doors had been shut cutting off that section of the building entirely. It was some time before the firemen were able to get the fire under control; its exact cause is not yet known.

When our representative called the Salvage men were still at work, and a tour of the building showed the enormous amount of damage that had been done, chiefly by water. The damage is estimated at nearly £20,000, and is stated to be covered by insurance.

"Notes by the Way"

A NEW WORK BY MR. JOHN C. FRANCIS

WE have pleasure in stating that in November next Notes and Queries will arrive at its sixtieth birthday; there is, therefore, an opportuneness in the announcement that a volume of gleanings by its veteran publisher, Mr. J. C. Francis, is to appear very shortly. The title of the book will be "Notes by the Way," and it will be issued on June 7th, jointly from the Notes and Queries office and from that of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. The book, which will have several illustrations, opens with a biographical sketch of Joseph Knight, F.S.A., the well-known dramatic critic, for many years editor of Notes and Queries, and closes with a memoir of the Rev. Joseph Woodfall Ebsworth, F.S.A., whose untiring labours in collecting materials for the "Ballad History of Great Britain" should be better known than they are at the present time. In addition to these memoirs the book will contain a variety of information which will be useful to those interested in bibliography, in the lives of authors, in the history of English publishing and journalism, in the curiosities of old London, and in many other subjects. For instance, in connection with the Cowper and Elizabeth Barrett Browning centenaries much biographical information is given, while the histories of various newspapers and of such publishing firms as George Bentley, W. & R. Chambers, and Cassell & Co. are told with many interesting particulars. Further, a full list of literary recipients of Civil List pensions is given, with biographical notes.

The Special Spring Number of The Studio

THE water-colours of J. M. W. Turner form the subject of the Special Spring Number of The Studio this year. Turner's water-colours are considered by some to be more characteristic than his oil paintings, and in this Special Number some thirty of his best works are given in colour. Many are reproduced from the originals in private collections, others from pictures in the National Gallery. All have been selected with care and discrimination and no pains have been spared to ensure the best possible results in their reproduction.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to praise the reproductive work of The Studio (Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode are their printers), but we are pleased to record our appreciation of the delightful plates of such a master as Turner as are given in this issue. Sir Charles Holroyd has contributed a foreword, and the articles by W. G. Rawlinson and A. J. Finberg are most interesting and combine in making what is likely to be one of the most successful specials ever published by The Studio.

Booksellers will not need to be reminded that many of the Special Numbers of The Studio are quite out of print and scarce, and can only be obtained at very considerable premiums. This number will not be reprinted, so prompt application is a sinâ qua non. The address is 44, Leicester Square, W.C.

Some of the Guests of the Booksellers for June 19th

AMONG those who have accepted invitations to be present at the Dinner of the Associated Booksellers on June 19th, are the following:—Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., Mr. W. L. Courtney, Mr. and Mrs. Clement Shorter, Mr. H. W. Lucy, Major Martin Hume, Mr. A. E. W. Mason, M.P., Mr. H. G. Wells, Mrs. St. Leger Harrison ("Lucas Malet"), Mrs. George Cornwallis West and Miss Beatrice Harraden.

A Bookseller J.P.

MR. W. J. DAVIS, the well known bookseller and publisher, of 29, Paternoster Row, E.C., who resides at Dartford, has been made a Justice of the Peace for the County of Kent.

Mr. Davis is connected with practically every Committee and Society in Dartford; he is an indefatigable worker, and is honoured and respected by all who know him.

He has written several works on Natural History, and is a keen naturalist. We wish Mr. Davis the success he undoubtedly deserves.

In Aid of the Children

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & CO., LTD. have in the press a volume of verse, entitled "Thoughts and Pastimes," by M. E. R., Associate I.S.A., which will be illustrated with original drawings by Mr. and Mrs. Willis Harley. The book is to be published in aid of the Children's Hospital, Great Ormond Street, and will be brought out at the forthcoming Bazaar to be held at Olympia on June 23rd.

Hannan's Lake View Gold Mining Co.

WE have an impression that some of our readers were interested in the above Company, if so we should be glad to hear from them.

Notes from Provincial Towns

[Under this heading we publish every week brief notes of book matters from the various provincial towns. We invite our readers to send us any items likely to be of any interest and use to the trade generally. A supply of stamped addressed Report Forms will be sent on application.]

BATH

At the dispersal of the library of the late Rev. Prebendary J. H. Stephenson at Lympsham Manor, Weston-super-Mare, last week, Mr. Gregory, of Argyle Street, Bath, was a large purchaser. Amongst other bargains he secured the second folio Shakespeare, printed by Thos. Cotes for Robert Allot and John Smethwick, London, 1632, for £65. This copy wanted two leaves in the text. Mr. Gregory also bought the Missale Hildisemensis, 1499, a splendid folio in Gothic type, printed throughout in red and black. Incidentally it may be stated that this is one of the most splendidly printed books in existence. Only three other copies are known, two of which are in the Hildéscheim Museum. Prebendary Stephenson's copy unfortunately lacks the "Christe," and three leaves of the canon. This book was one of the models from which the late William Morris designed some of his Kelmscott Press publications. The sale was conducted by Messrs. Lalone Brothers & Parham, of Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. George Gregory, 5 and 5A, Argyle Street, has just published Nos. 189–190 of his useful Imperial Book Catalogue and Report. Some 3,000 items are catalogued, comprising rare books, voyages and travels, English literature, standard general literature, &c.

"Set in Silver" (Methuen), the new motor novel by Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Williamson, has some striking incidental references to Bath and its historical and other associations. The heroine hopes to obtain from Mr. Meehan (from whose alluring bookshop in Gay Street she and other personages in the novel are unable to draw themselves away) a sixpenny edition of Fanny Burney's "Evelina." She considers Mr. Meehan, who acted as their cicerone while they were in the city, must of a surety know more about Bath and its highly interesting associations "than any man living."

BELFAST

Mr. Wm. Tait, 3, Wellington Park Avenue, has just published "The Arcane Schools: a Review of their Origin and Antiquity," by John Yarker. It contains a general history of freemasonry and its relation to the theosophic, scientific and philosophic mysteries.

DARLINGTON

Mr. J. C. Brigham, bookseller, has removed to Conniscliffe Road.

LIVERPOOL

The Liverpool Booksellers' Co., Ltd., 70, Lord Street, have in the press a "History of the Congregation Worshipping in Hope Street Church, with an Investigation of Early Nonconformity in Liverpool." It is by H. D. Roberts and will contain about 400 pages, royal 8vo. and there will be some 20 half-tone illustrations. It is to be published in August.

OXFORD

Messrs. A. R. Mowbray & Co., 9, High Street, have just issued a handy little guide to this town. It is published at one penny, and contains a plan and illustrations. There should be a large demand for the guide.

RUGBY

Mr. A. J. Lawrence, printer to Rugby School, has just published an interesting brochure on the characters and incidents in Tom Hughes' "Tom Brown's Schooldays." It is by Lieut.-Colonel Sydney Selfe, O.R., and is entitled "Notes on the Characters and Incidents depicted by the Master-hand of Tom Hughes in 'Tom Brown's Schooldays.'" It contains in addition information as to Rugby School in the days of the great Thomas Arnold, D.D.

The National Book Trade Provident Society

THE Hon. Secretary of the London & District Branch has had the pleasure of receiving from Mr. W. M. Meredith, the President of the London Branch of the Society, a letter in which he conveys to the members his very sincere thanks for their telegram of sympathy on the death of his father, Mr. George Meredith.

Trade Change

OWING to damage to the building in consequence of the reconstruction of the adjoining premises, Messrs. Gall & Inglis have received warning to vacate their London premises at 25, Paternoster Square without delay. Messrs. Gall & Inglis have secured the temporary occupation of 27, Paternoster Square—two doors off—where orders are being attended to. The firm have been thirty-five years in their present premises.

Obituary

FRIENDS all over the country will be sorry to hear of the death of Mr. Richard Birdsall, the noted bookbinder of Northampton. For some time he had been in failing health, but on Monday, the 10th inst, he, with Mrs. Birdsall and one of his daughters, accompanied by his brother-in-law, Mr. Emery, of St. Neots, and others, went to Switzerland for a change. He did not get better and had to take to his bed, and on Thursday the 20th, departed this life; his age was 67. As a master and as a friend he will be greatly missed. His funeral took place at Northampton on Wednesday the 26th. He leaves three sons and two daughters.

THE June number of Travel and Exploration contains articles by Colonel Sir T. H. Holdich, Captain F. H. Shaw, Dr. Oscar Bongard, Captain A. F. Townshend, A. G. Adshead, George D. Abraham, and others. It is nicely produced and the illustrations are really excellent.

Letters to the Editor

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.

A Dickens Dictionary

DEAR SIR,—The letter of Mr. A. J. Philip regarding The Athenæum review of "A Dickens Dictionary" calls for some notice from us. We have already informed Mr. Philip that it is incumbent upon us to correct any proved mis-statement that is made in The Athenæum, but we did not feel it incumbent upon us to insert a letter from a correspondent who was discourteous enough to advise us in future to employ a reviewer who could read and write. The letter sent for insertion was of a most discursive nature, and did not contain any proof of mis-statement of fact. To deal as briefly as possible with the points now raised:—

1. We adhere to our opinion of what might be held to justify the title "A Dickens Dictionary."

2. Our words were "'Mr. Carker the Junior' is cited as 'Mr. Carker Junior.'" The omission of the word "the" is important, as the Mr. Carker in question was senior in age.

3. As T in P.J.T. represents the surname of the man indicated, and P his position in the Inn, we naturally prefer to put T last, but we did not say that Mr. Philip's arrangement of the initials was wrong.

4. What we said about "Edwin Drood" was with reference to the passage just mentioned. P.J.T. occurs in "Edwin Drood," but Mr. Philip omits entirely to supply the reference to that book.

5. As to the originals or prototypes of Dickens's characters, houses, &c., the passage Mr. Philip quotes from our review is correct according to his own Preface. In this (p. x) he mentions that the sources he has relied on "include a very large number of miscellaneous cuttings from periodicals of all kinds." "Periodicals of all kinds" are not good authorities. We give one instance of what we mean. We regard as conjecture, and the wildest of conjecture, the following statement. "Another prototype of Sam (Weller) has been suggested in Andrew Fairservice in 'Rob Roy.'"

As regards the editorial comment we note that, before Mr. Philip's book appeared, there was already in existence "The Dickens Dictionary" of Messrs. Pierce & Wheeler. This book gives several references for characters, not confining itself, as the later one does, to the first chapter in which they appear in Dickens's text. Further, it is more accurate than Mr. Philip's.

This book is well known to Dickensians. Journalistic courtesy, where the affairs of another paper are concerned, surely requires a more thorough study of the question at issue than has been exhibited in the present instance.

Yours faithfully,

EDITOR, Athenæum.

Athenæum Office,
Bream's Buildings.
May 26th.

[We regret if we have done any injustice to The Athenæum in our attempt to do justice to Mr. Philip. It appears that The Athenæum's statement respecting Edwin Drood can be read as Mr. Philip reads it and as the Editor of The Athenæum reads it. We leave our readers to judge by giving it, from The Athenæum of April 17th.

"The mysterious letters P.J.T., which afforded Mr. Grewgious matter for speculation, are here given as T.J.P. without the date, 1747, which Dickens specially notes twice. There is no reference to 'Edwin Drood' at all, a strange piece of carelessness; and we may add, despite the note to the contrary, that there is no reason for supposing the explanation of the letters to be other than set forth in The Dickensian of February, 1906."

It seems to us the reviewer was a little careless in his writing because, although he meant to say that the letters P.J.T. were not referred to as being in "Edwin Drood," it might also be taken as asserting there was no mention of "Edwin Drood" in the book. It is obvious that the omission of the reference was an unintentional one.

The Editor of The Athenæum gives one the impression that it was because Mr. Philip "was discourteous" that they did not insert his letter, and also because it was "most discursive, &c."

Here is a copy of the letter and we leave it to our readers to judge whether it was discursive or discourteous, especially from a writer whose work—a two years' labour—has been asserted to be "of little value" by such an authority as The Athenæum.

The Editor The Athenæum.

SIR,—I was astonished at the review of my "Dickens Dictionary" in your issue of last week, as it is unlike what one would naturally look for in The Athenæum. The review contains many misrepresentations and some mis-statements; probably the most unfortunate is the statement that "There is no reference to Edwin Drood at all." The Drood entry occupies nearly a column of the book. The "Dickens Dictionary" contains nearly twelve thousand references—an analysis of more than seven millions of words—and no doubt there are errors and omissions; these I hope to correct in future editions. But your reviewer has been most unfortunate in his selection. Like many writers I am never satisfied with work done, but your contributor has reassured me, as with the best intention imaginable to condemn the book, and no nicety of selection in his methods, he has been unable to do more than he has.—Yours faithfully,

Signed A. J. PHILIP.

We understand that it was not until The Athenæum declined to insert this short note that Mr. Philip sent another, and in the covering letter, not sent for publication, made use of the expression about employing a reviewer who could read and write.

It is only our opinion, of course, but it seems to us the points objected to by the reviewer are very small blemishes in a work of over 400 pages or 800 columns, and that it is not a work "of little value." With all deference to the authority of The Athenæum we maintain our assertion that Mr. Philip gives a great deal of most useful information not to be found elsewhere, either in the work of Messrs. Pierce and Wheeler, or any other about Dickens.

We have too much respect for The Athenæum to wish to be in any way discourteous. We ought perhaps to have referred to the Editor, but it seemed such a fait accompli as to be useless to do so. The Athenæum had shut its front door, and the author was obliged to get the P.C. to open it.—ED.]

A Bookseller's Views: "Too much being made of the Sevenpenny Cloth"

DEAR SIR,—In this crusade against the "Sevenpenny" cloth edition, it seems to me that too much is being made of 7d. as the price for a recent novel; I consider that the shilling reprint does as much harm to the 6s. novel when issued quickly after the first publication of the 6s. edition in exactly the same manner as the 6s. edition did the 31s. 6d. novel of the past.

When I commenced business about a quarter of a century since, my subscription to Mudie was chiefly for novels that were published in three volumes, which, as soon as they were offered at from 3s. to 6s. the set, I bought secondhand, but when the authors commenced bringing out the 6s. edition within eighteen months or so of the 3 vol. one, I immediately discontinued buying them. This was the case with most circulating libraries, and the result was that Messrs. Mudie and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son declined to purchase them in that form; this was the doom of the 31s. 6d. novel. If I remember rightly Miss Braddon's "London Pride" was the last of the three deckers, and Messrs. Mudie and Smith did not buy till it was published soon after at 6s.

When first the 6s. (4s. 6d.) became the only form in which a new novel could be obtained, I used to order by the dozen for stock, whereas now I buy only what I require for my library, and perhaps one for stock, except in the case of a few well-known and popular authors whose books are fairly safe as stock, and which the public consider worth purchasing for giving away as presents; a very small percentage is bought for personal reading.

The sixpenny reprint and later the shilling cloth or paper edition I consider are entirely responsible for the change in the attitude of the public towards the 6s. novel. I am constantly being asked for a 1s. copy of "The Great Amulet," and when I offer the 6s. one my customer usually takes a 1s. or 7d. reprint of some other book instead, and says he (or she) will wait for the cheaper edition. I merely mention this book because there has been so large a sale for the 1s. "Captain Desmond" that the shilling public wants the other book at the same price. The same applies to many others of the 6s. novels.

It is quite useless fighting against the 7d. or 1s. edition, because in this age of machinery it has become possible to produce a well-printed and strongly bound book at 7d., with a profit to the publishers that satisfies them.

What I would suggest as the best way out of the difficulty would be to bring out new novels at 3s. net, and not issue cheaper editions for three years at least. This period I consider sufficiently long, as by then the demand for the better edition is practically over, and it is not too long for the book to have been forgotten.

The arrangement would also suit the libraries better, as there would be a better opportunity for disposing of surplus copies than now. I find I cannot get 1s. for good novels, whereas a few years ago they sold freely at 2s. The public prefer a reprint which is new to an original edition that has been more or less disfigured by a label, and which is not so pleasant to hold, nor so clean, after it has twelve months library use, as the handy editions that are now appearing.

If the matter were debated by the booksellers when they meet in London next month it would be a good opportunity for finding the opinion of the trade, and I fancy there would be many who would agree with me.—Yours very truly,

WALTER RUCK,
Bookseller.

The Central Library,
Maidstone.

[Mr. Ruck's letter will be read with much interest. The difficulty about reducing the price of first publication of a novel from 6s. (nominal) to 3s. net is that practically the only things which cost less are a slightly inferior cloth binding and a slightly inferior paper, so there is less margin for profit for all concerned unless a much larger number can be sold; but the libraries are the chief purchasers, and their clients who borrow novels to read will not borrow more because the book is cheaper. We should like to have Mr. Ruck's views as to whether there would be a really considerable increase in purchasers of novels among the general public if his suggestion could be carried out. In any case we are glad he votes for net fiction, just as educational booksellers have suggested in our columns, and would welcome, net school books. "All books net to the public" should be the great ideal to fight for; and in the end the public would get better value for their money than they do now.—ED.]

The Educational Book Trade Question

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of May 8th I was pleased to see a letter on the school book question from a "Northern General Bookseller." I looked forward to this week's issue for other letters on the subject: to my surprise, however, I find not even one. To my mind this is amazing in view of the disastrous consequences to local booksellers all over the kingdom.

The large discounts now given to Education Authorities by school supply firms has had the effect of drawing the trade from local booksellers in every part of the country. Discounts are being offered as high as 45 per cent. off all school books; every publisher and bookseller knows that even school supply firms do not get such terms as to enable them to give 45 per cent. off. Obviously it is done at a loss, and if any profit is to be made, subterranean methods have to be resorted to. Viewed from its moral and commercial aspect this is a serious state of affairs; it makes honourable trading impossible and robs the educational publisher of part of the harvest he should reap.

All this is bad enough in all conscience, but to my mind is not the most serious aspect of the case. The passing of the country bookseller is fraught with serious consequence to the publisher. For some years past the country bookseller has been disappearing or degenerating into a mere newspaper and picture postcard shop, so that annually the publisher's avenues of distribution are becoming fewer and fewer. Thoughtful booksellers must be struck with the fact that publishers raise a great storm about imaginary evils and display astonishing apathy towards grave dangers. This is borne out by the vigorous agitation now going on against the sevenpenny cloth bound novel. The publishers of 6s. novels have taken fright, and, of course, they have inspired the agitation. I sell thousands of 6s. novels yearly, and my experience goes to prove that the 7d. novel appeals to a different public, and those people who can afford to buy 6s. novels continue to do so.

The 7d. novels—the "People's" and "Everyman's" Libraries—are about the only books one will find in the bookshops of small country towns; they are helping in a small degree to revive bookselling in our smaller towns. But if the publisher desires the reappearance of such avenues of distribution something more substantial will require to be done.

"Northern General Bookseller" suggests the net price for school books. So far as my experience goes I am afraid this is not practicable. Education Authorities would be up in arms against it; besides, it would mean the re-arranging of prices of publications already in circulation, and this would be too big an order. What I believe to be practical is the limiting of the discount by the Publishers' Association—say, 25 per cent. off to Education Authorities and 2d. in the 1s. off school books sold over the counter. Were this brought into force an enormous amount of trade would revert back to the country booksellers—trade which, owing to the large discounts given, is at present diverted to the large school supply firms.

Educational publishers should have no use for such firms; they have become their formidable competitors and ride their publications and specialities into the schools on the back of those issued by the great publishing houses.

The school book question is fraught with grave issues to publishers and booksellers. I have the honour of a slight acquaintance with many of our great publishers; they have struck me as men of considerable culture, and of great business capacity. In view of this fact there is hope of something being done if only the trade will come forward to fight this question in order to get the trade which at present goes out of their localities.

AN EDUCATIONAL BOOKSELLER.

Daylight Saving

SIR,—You are recording instances of the voluntary adoption of the principles of the Daylight Saving Bill. Will you allow me space to say that our employers, Messrs. Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., close the premises at 5 p.m. instead of 6 p.m. during the summer months, and this without starting an hour earlier. We call this real Daylight Saving, and the system has been in force now during the last few years.—Yours faithfully,

International Copyright from the Printer's Point

DEAR SIR,—I have just read with great interest the correspondence that has recently been carried on in your columns on the above subject. Messrs. Macmillan and Bell—naturally, perhaps—treat the matter from the point of view of the British publisher and author, who are materially interested in the continuance of the present state of things and who would be prejudicially affected by the change now proposed in our Copyright Law.

I should be glad if you would allow me the use of your columns to put the matter from the point of view of the British printer, who is now prejudicially affected by the present state of the law and is likely to be still more so in the future, and who is trying to find a remedy for the grievous injury to his trade from which he is now suffering.

First, then, the British printer is not desirous by his proposed action to drive the United States to join the Berne Convention, as Mr. Macmillan says, or to get from the United States any of the business that rightly belongs to them—the printing of works of American authors produced by American publishers. His sole motive is simply to restore and keep for this country the business that rightly belongs to it—the printing of works of British authors produced by British publishers, which is now being filched from him by the "employment clauses" in the United States Copyright Law.

To do this he proposes simply to insert in the English Copyright Law exactly the same provision that exists in that of the United States, and in exactly the same words—that to enjoy copyright in this country, works in English must be printed from types set up in this country or from plates produced from types set up in this country.

To stigmatise such a provision as (1) Protectionist, as (2) a measure of Retaliation, as (3) certain to be objected to by the United States as abolishing the Reciprocity of the conditions for the grant of copyright, as between aliens and British subjects, required by the United States, and as (4) resulting in their immediately withdrawing copyright from British authors, as Mr. Macmillan does in his letter, appears to me entirely unwarrantable.

In the first place, can it be said to be more Protectionist than the provision in our recent Patents Act, which insists that in order to secure patent rights for an invention it must be manufactured in this country? In the second place, how can that be considered as Retaliation by the United States which is nothing more than an exact assimilation of our law to their own? Thirdly, the Reciprocity of the conditions would not be violated, as the same condition would be exacted of the Englishman as of the American. And lastly, I would hesitate to assume, as Mr. Macmillan does, that a great nation like the United States would be capable of the littleness, the contemptible meanness of trying to secure possession of some trade that does not of right belong to it at the expense of justice, of fair-play and of the literary interests of the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The introduction of such a provision into our law would, as Mr. Bell rightly says, take away the power of the British publisher to have his works printed on the Continent; but not many works are printed in this way, and it is a matter that may be neglected.

The present appears to be a time singularly propitious for the settlement of this question and for the righting of this wrong from which the British printer has so long suffered. The recent Patent Rights Act has altered our notions as to the conditions we can rightly impose on the grant of monopoly rights; the confirmation, or otherwise, of the new propositions made at the recent Berlin Convention must shortly come before Parliament, and the recent alterations in the American law, granting two months in place of simultaneous publication, would seem to necessitate an alteration in our law in this respect and an application to Parliament for that purpose.—I am dear sir, yours truly,

T. T. HODGSON.

Notices of Books

From Mr. B. H. Blackwell, Oxford.—"A Book of Corpus Verses," by Julian James Cotton. The author has done wisely in publishing in a collective form these scholarly poems, and Latin Elegiacs, reminiscent of his old college and its associations. The brochure has been issued in an elegant and suitable form by its publisher.

From The Cambridge University Press.—"Gai Juli Cæsaris: De Bello Gallico." Liber I. With Vocabulary by E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A.——"Horatius, and Other Stories." Adapted from Livy, with Vocabulary, by G. M. Edwards, M.A.——"Colloquia Latina." Adapted from Erasmus, with Vocabulary, by G. M. Edwards, M.A.——"Le Serf." With Vocabulary by Arthur R. Ropes, M.A.——"The Fairy Tales of Master Perrault." With Vocabulary by Walter Rippmann, M.A. These handy volumes are bound in boards and printed on good paper with clear type. The lines of each chapter or page, as the case may be, are numbered, and the vocabularies have in each case been prepared with scholarly care.——"Phæthon, and Other Stories from Ovid." Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by G. M. Edwards, M.A. This little book owes its origin to a belief that a selection from Ovid should contain a good proportion of Hexameter pieces, the Elegiac couplet being apt to become wearisome. The introduction contains a life of Ovid, a short account of his chief works, and a dissertation on the metres used by the poet. The notes are exceptionally lucid and apt.

From Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward, Ltd.—"Photography for the Press" is a handbook that is likely to be of great service to the many photographers who are anxious to get their work accepted by the illustrated papers. It contains practical advice of how to approach an Editor, what fees to ask, and much other useful information. A list of the journals that use photographic illustrations, with the office addresses, date of publication and class of print desired, make it a reliable press guide for illustrators. That it has reached a third edition is proof of its utility and popularity.

From Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd.—"Wilhelmina: the Adventures of a Dutch Doll," by Nora Pitt-Taylor, pictured by Gladys Hall. "O'Kissme San: a Doll from Japan," by Harvey Gaskell, illustrated by M. E. Thompson and H. M. Pemberton. Our professional critic, whose name is Molly Dolly and who is over seven (so she ought to know), says these are darling pretty little books—the coloured pictures are quite lovely; but she doesn't think much of the dolls fixed on to the covers. Wilhelmina doll, at least, might have been properly dressed.

From Messrs. Dent & Co.—"Junius Unveiled," by James Smith. Mr. Smith writes an interesting and readable little book to prove that the real Junius was none other than Gibbon. He tantalises us by reserving for a future edition an explanation of the somewhat remarkable circumstances under which the clue to the authorship of the "Letters of Junius" came into his possession. He marshalls his evidence with much skill and even those who differ from his conclusions must admit that he makes out a strong case. He possesses a knowledge of the life and time of Gibbon which is unusual in its range.

From Health & Strength, Ltd.—"The Art of Health," by Upton Sinclair and Michael Williams. We sincerely recommend this book to those who suffer from various ailments and to those who are in health. The rules it gives for living appear to be thoroughly reliable, although many seem strange.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—"Peter Homunculus," by Gilbert Cannan. An original and curiously clever study of the development of a man of genius. Mr. Cannan has got to the bottom of Peter's character, and in doing so his story has suffered. There is no plot, properly speaking. All kinds of strange, real people gather together and talk: they all talk a great deal; and Peter uses them—churns them up in his brain and uses them as literary fodder. It is a remarkable book, in spite of its faults. The dialogue is too like real dialogue to be smooth and easy: it is jerky, awkward and terribly natural.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—"The Great Prophecies of the Centuries Concerning the Church," by G. H. Pember. Anyone wishing for a counter-blast to the general tone of modern theological literature and a return to the mentailty of Georgian Protestantism should not miss this strange book. It is full of judgment, it divides mankind into the categories of "saved" and "unsaved," the latter evidently containing in the author's opinion the greater mass of struggling humanity. His view of the Deity is anthropomorphic. He believes that the world is estranged from and hostile to God, and that the Day of Judgment is at hand. He deduces these conclusions from the Gospel of Matthew and the Apocalypse, and in close upon 650 closely-printed pages draws as gloomy a picture of the present state of man as we have met for many a long day, to say nothing of the awfulness of the prospect that is awaiting him beyond. We gather that only a small minority have any reason for hope.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—"Poems," by W. J. Cameron. The very decided literary merits shown by the author of this unpretentious book of modern verse stamp him as a man of taste and culture, to whom the gift of song comes naturally. This is especially evident in such variant poems as "One Thing I Know," "A Royalist in Springtime," "The Pied Piper," and "The Old Villager," in which Mr. Cameron's muse is seen at her very best.

From Messrs. Alston Rivers, Ltd.—"The Old Home," by Gerard Bendall. This is a story that Dr. Johnson would have liked, which is a piece of high praise. It is full of humour and sagacity; it is clean and wholesome; it is free from mock modesty and all shams. John and Arthur Hillburn are bachelors; they live at Millcote Place in comparative luxury. Being men of healthy bodies, they fall in love; so does their distant American cousin who visits them; likewise the Vicar, and the other cousin, who is a University Professor. In fact, everyone falls in love, and in a downright, sensible way, with no unnecessary heroics. The tone of the book is old-fashioned, yet occasionally advanced ideas are put forward; the various discussions of the Hillburn relatives have a charming literary flavour, and the entire story is written in scholarly and delightful English.

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—"Messages from the Epistle to the Hebrews," by Handley C. G. Moule, D.D. Bishop Moule examines the Epistle to the Hebrews "with an aim simple and altogether practical for heart and for life." He does not discuss its authorship, but gathers from the Epistle large and conspicuous spiritual messages likely to be serviceable to mankind. His exposition is full of suggestion, and it opens out new avenues of thought.

From CHATTO & WINDUS'S LIST

THE RUSSIAN BASTILLE (THE FORTRESS OF SCHLUESSELBURG)

By I. P. YOUVATSHEV. Author of "The Curse of the Romanovs." Translated by Dr. A. S. RAPPOPORT. Demy 8vo, cloth, with 16 Plates, 7s. 6d. net.

The author, a Russian naval officer of considerable talent and erudition, was suspected by the Government as one of the "thinking officers," and suffered two years' solitary confinement in Schluesselburg. He gives a graphic description of the inmates of the prison, whose tragic fate invariably concluded in the madness or suicide which only a strong will enabled the author to escape.

METHOD GASPEY-OTTO-SAUER FOR THE LEARNING OF MODERN LANGUAGES

The advantage which this Method has over all others is its combination of theory and practice, i.e. a clear scientific exposition of the Grammar, combined with practical conversational exercises. By strictly adhering to this Method the great difficulty of enabling the pupil to speak and write foreign languages has been successfully solved for the first time. The New Editions have been improved and kept up to date.

S. & S. GRAPHIC ARITHMETIC CHARTS

By G. R. BENNETT, B.Sc.

1 doz. Typical Examples, worked out as Models, and clearly printed on strong Manilla Sheets, 20 ins. × 30 ins., 4s. 6d. net. Also issued in S. & S. Patent Demonstration Portfolio, with six additional Black Sheets ruled specially for the Teacher's own Graphs, 10s. net.

The location of points, the use of co-ordinates, the representation of direct and indirect proportion, the plotting of statistics, the interpretation of graphs, even to the extent of prophesying future conditions, and simultaneous equations, have all been illustrated in this series of charts.

THE SOVEREIGN PRIMERS FOR INFANTS' SCHOOLS

Arranged on the Phonic System, with numerous beautifully Coloured Pictures. Teachers of Infants' Schools should not fail to see this series.

THE S. & S. PRACTICAL OBJECT DRAWING

By R. E. GREEN, Art Master.

Books I. to VI., each 1s. net. A Teacher's Handbook for each class. Numerous Illustrations in Colour and in Black and White.

Note what H.M.I. says:—"The value to teachers of such a complete manual as the Six Parts make will be very great. There is a clear, definite, graded course—each point in it being a point arising naturally and definitely out of what has preceded it, and all the exercises suggested being on what children like, common homely 'friendly' objects, both natural and artificial. It will make the teacher's task of getting the children to see at once the points which they must seize upon when drawing an object, an easy one, and it will place the teacher himself on right lines of thought as regards Object Drawing."

The Pronunciation of English. Phonetics and Phonetic Transcriptions. By DANIEL JONES, M.A., Lecturer on Phonetics at University College, London.

Crown 8vo 2s 6d net

The present work is primarily designed for the use of English students and teachers, and more especially for students in training colleges and teachers whose aim is to correct undesirable pronunciation in their scholars. At the same time it is hoped that the book may be found of use to lecturers, barristers, clergy, &c., in short, to all who desire to read or speak in public.

Phaethon and other Stories from Ovid. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge.

Fcap. 8vo 1s 6d

This little book owes its origin to a belief that a selection from Ovid should contain a good proportion of Hexameter pieces. The famous Greek legends, of which many excellent examples are provided from the "Metamorphoses," should become a "possession for ever" to the intelligent reader. For imparting the rudiments of sound Latin scholarship these stories provide much useful material.

Educational Books and the Net Book System

FROM the figures which Mr. Bowes, of Cambridge, has compiled yearly for some years now, it is evident that the best thing ever done for our book trade was the establishment of the net book system. Although the great fields of fiction and education have not yet come under the healthy influence of the system, in almost all other departments of publishing it has replaced the degrading discount anarchy. Started in England at the suggestion and by the example of Mr. Macmillan, the net book was soon hailed, not only here but also in America, as a thing which could save the retail book trade—and as the only thing. Under the "net" banner, and chiefly with a view to fighting for all it means, the British and American Publishers' and Booksellers' Associations came into existence. Last summer the American book trade went through a sharp crisis in its history; in consequence of the partial success of American goods stores in underselling net books, and perhaps also in consequence of some mistakes in tactics on the part of the publishers, there was fear for a time that the American Publishers' Association would break up. Fortunately the retail booksellers of America at once recognised the danger of the situation for them—if anarchy reigned over the publishers its baneful effects would soon be felt by the booksellers; so by quick and vigorous action the booksellers saved the situation. They called meetings, passed resolutions, and got such support from one end of America to the other that they put heart into the publishers to go on with their associated work.

At the present moment, if the booksellers of our country and of America could have all books made net by voting for it, the thing would be carried by a very large majority.

We do not, however, pretend to think that all booksellers are as yet in favour of the net book—under present conditions. It has been, and is, a hardship on those who are unable to buy largely and yet have to pay heavy charges for carriage.

Net School Books

A great advance would be made in improving book-trade conditions if, as has been suggested and hoped by many booksellers — by some very recently in our own columns,—the net system could be extended to books used in schools and colleges. We think that here again the majority of those interested in the production and sale of such books would vote for the net book. But there are many obstacles in the way, and some which are not very apparent will be found the most difficult. In the first place, a great number of school-masters and school-mistresses in private schools have long been accustomed to make a profit out of the supply of school books to the pupils. We all know when the school bills come in from schools of this class that the extras for books, stationery, &c., mount up term after term, especially when half a dozen or more pupils have to be paid for out of one purse. Now it is not natural to expect the schools are going to give up this important source of income without a struggle—it is an item in the goodwill of a school, and is not to be got rid of merely by waving the net book banner. School-masters and mistresses and school teachers have their unions and associations and can unite to fight—they are not like the general public, a fortuitous concourse of atoms with no means of resistance. Booksellers who wish to supply schools with net books should ask themselves whether this objection is one which is lightly to be brushed aside, and if they think it can we shall be glad to hear how they propose to do it. It must be remembered that the educational publishers have now forms of competition to meet which did not exist a generation ago, including educational supply associations and State or Municipal publishing departments. The supply associations have become formidable competitors with the booksellers, and in many cases have driven the latter out of the field of school book supply. It is worse than useless for booksellers to ignore this competition, or to expect educational publishers to ignore it, when it means for them, as a rule, big orders and safe money. The school-masters will have to be fought and beaten before they will accept the net book, but the educational supply associations must not be fought or they will beat—they must be convinced. It must not be forgotten that many of them are directly or indirectly producers and publishers as well as distributors of school books and requisites; great energy and much capital and brains are invested in these supply associations, and booksellers who think they can be set aside (as one suggested in our columns recently) are labouring under a great delusion. Being conducted by men of business, we have no doubt they will fairly consider any proposals which are fairly put before them. There is every reason to suppose that the adoption generally of the net system would be to their advantage, for the ruinous competition in discount giving to get orders is worse in the educational book market than in any other branch of the trade—the discount is not merely in cash to customers, but in outlay of all kinds to secure their orders. At one time, when congresses of teachers and school-masters were few and far between, the publishers were invited to show their books free of charge; now they are invited to fight each other for exhibition spaces at ridiculous prices. The educational publishers would, doubtless, most of them, like to make school books net—if they could do it without injury to their own business.

In America the booksellers are advocating a general extension of the net book system, even to include fiction; and one or two publishers there have already tried net fiction, with what result we cannot say. The American booksellers are also crying out for another thing, i.e., more discount for themselves on the net book, and that, in our opinion, will have to come in time, and it will be the best thing for everybody concerned when it does come.

A satisfied bookseller doing business which encourages him to do more and more is not only putting profit into his own pocket but into the pockets of publisher and author as well. We believe and hope that the net book with more liberal discount to the trade will come; but the booksellers must not suppose publishers are able to make such a concession out of their own pockets, the thing must be arranged to the satisfaction of the publishers and authors as well as of the booksellers. It is not to be supposed that the many thousands of existing agreements between authors and publishers can be suddenly upset—except to the great loss or ruin of the publishers.

The net system is a splendid remedy, but like all splendid remedies much of its virtue lies in the care and caution with which it is applied.

Notes and Announcements

Dr. Sven Hedin's new book, "Trans-Himalaya: Discoveries and Adventures in Tibet," will be published in November by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The work gives a full account of the famous explorer's last journey to this almost inaccessible country, which has proved so fruitful in important scientific results. It will be in two volumes, and will contain about 400 illustrations.

Miss Jeannette L. Gilder has returned to her old post of Literary Adviser of the New York House of Messrs. Cassell & Co. Some years ago she held this position, but had to give it up because of the pressure of other work.

His Majesty and the Prince of Wales have been pleased to accept copies of Mr. John Foster Fraser's most recent book "Quaint Subjects of the King," which deals with the lesser-known tribes in distant parts of the Empire.

"Fifty Years of New Japan" is the provisional title given to an important work on the growth of Japan since the opening up of the country. It is compiled by Count Okuma, late Prime Minister of Japan, with the assistance and co-operation of the highest authorities on the various subjects. The work is being edited by Mr. Marcus B. Huish, Vice-Chairman of the Japan Society. It will be published in the early autumn by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., in two demy 8vo. volumes.

The poem "On the Oxford Circuit" will be remembered by many readers. In this Mr. Justice Darling has made many changes and additions; he also has written a number of sonnets and other poems, the whole being illustrated by Mr. Austin O. Spare. The volume will be published immediately by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier have in the press a translation by the Rev. Neil Buchanan, of the third edition of "Die Lebenskrafte des Evangeliums," which they will publish under the title of "The Living Forces of the Gospel: Experiences of a Missionary in Animistic Heathendom," by the Rev. Johannes Warneck, L.Th., a son of the Rev. Dr. Gustav Warneck, of Halle, whose "Outline of a History of Protestant Missions from the Reformation to the Present Time" is now in the eighth edition.

On Tuesday, June 15th, Mr. Heinemann will publish a new book by Charles Dixon, with the attractive title of "Bird-Life of London." It describes all the birds to be found within the radius of fifteen miles of St. Paul's, and should prove of great interest to all lovers of Natural History in the Metropolis.

Mr. Hilaire Belloc, M.P., has written a book intended for the use of the general traveller in the Pyrenees, and especially for those who propose to travel on foot. There are many sketches by Mr. Belloc, and numerous maps. The physical nature of the Pyrenees and the political history are dealt with at length, and a chapter on the road system deals with the opportunities for bicycling and motoring in the range. There is also a very necessary chapter on the Inns and Hotels of the region. The title of the book is "The Pyrenees."

Among the books which Messrs. Nisbet & Co., Ltd., have arranged to publish in the autumn are two of special interest connected with naval matters, viz.: a volume of "Reminiscences," by Miss Agnes Weston, of the Royal Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth. This volume should appeal strongly to those interested in naval matters and in the great work Miss Weston has done and is doing among sailors. Also an important volume by Carlyon Bellairs, M.P., on "Admiralty Policy and Naval Reform."

Old Harrovians, and all interested in the famous school, will be pleased to know that the Life of the late Bosworth Smith is being written by Lady Grogan, and is being prepared for publication in the autumn.

Another interesting work will be a volume of Reminiscences by Mr. Eugene Stock.

A new series of The Schoolmaster will commence with the number dated June 5th. On and from that date The Schoolmaster will not only be the organ of the Union but the property of the Union; it will be under the supervision of the Executive, and will be edited by Mr. Yoxall.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. publish Mr. G. B. Burgin's new Turkish novel, "The Slaves of Allah." The story deals with the adventures of an English girl in Constantinople, who is pursued by one Izzedin Pasha, who is coquetting with the Old Turks and the Young. Mr. Burgin has an intimate knowledge of Turkish life, and in the present state of Turkish politics the book should be especially welcome.

Mr. Coulson Kernahan's popular novel "The Dumpling," is published in Cassell's series of Sixpenny Novels.

Mr. Culley publishes the Report of the Oxford Convention of the Wesleyan Methodist Union for Social Service, containing a verbatim report of the papers read at the Convention, and other matters of first importance to all interested in social work.

One of the most important books of recent years on furniture and decoration will be issued by Mr. Werner Laurie about the middle of this month. It is a superb folio written by a recognised expert, Mr. Francis Lenygon, who employs no less than 277 plates to illustrate his text. The title of the work is "The Decoration and Furniture of English Mansions during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries."

"Giles' Trip to London." We have received from Messrs. Jarrold & Sons a copy of the latest sixpenny edition of this now famous work; this edition completes the 249th thousand.

Messrs. Mills & Boon inform us that they will issue very shortly the first volumes of a "Thrilling Adventure" Library, Cr. 8vo., 6s., which will be specially for lovers of exciting fiction. "We shall include," they say, "several new writers who might possibly pass unrecognised had their work not been included in a Library of Adventure." The first three volumes will be:—"The Lady Calphurnia Royal," by Albert Dorrington and A. G. Stephens (June); "The Adventures of Captain Jack," by Max Pemberton (July); "The Kingdom of Earth," by Anthony Partridge (August).

Messrs. Thomas Murby & Co. will publish at once at one shilling a small book, "Woman Suffrage: a National Danger," by Mr. Heber Hart, LL.D. Mr. Hart is an authority on this subject.

Mr. Ernest Evans has prepared, and Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will shortly publish, a companion volume to his "Plants and their Ways." This second book is entitled, "Animals and their Ways," and has been written for students of Nature Study, and as an introduction to the serious study of the structure, functions, and binomics of animals. It can be used as a first book of Zoology, and will enable the student to obtain a sound knowledge of the more common characteristics of animals. The book will be well illustrated, and can be recommended as a suitable book for use in Secondary Schools, Evening Continuation Schools, Technical Schools, and for private students.

The Sanitary Publishing Co. have just published a second and practically re-written edition of "Sanitary Law and Practice," by W. Robertson and Chas. Porter. We hope to refer more fully to this useful and practical work in our next issue.

Messrs. Longmans publish "Sixty Years of Uppingham Cricket," by W. S. Patterson, Captain of the School Eleven in 1873. With portraits and other illustrations.

The June number of Yachting, published by Mr. Horace Cox of The Field, contains articles on "A 22-ft. Sharpie Cruiser for the Norfolk Broads," "To Russia in a Timber Ship," "The Sea Anchor in Fine Weather," "To Cowes for the Regatta," "Whitsuntide at Hole Haven," "Analysis of the Month's Racing," &c. Altogether an excellent number, with plenty of good reading matter and interesting information.

Mr. Henry Frowde is publishing under the title of "Morals in Modern Business," a number of addresses delivered at Yale University.

A new novel by Miss Florence Warden, entitled "A Society Scare," is announced for early publication by Messrs. Hurst & Blackett. The scene of this mystery story is laid in Ostend.

Included in Mr. Elkin Mathews' list of early Summer publications is "A Summer Garden," by Annette Furness. The book contains no exciting adventures or deep-laid plots, but if the reader likes to follow Lady Dorothy and the Sage into the old-world garden filled with the scent of sweet-smelling flowers, he will pass a very pleasant interlude. Lady Dorothy and her friend the Sage discourse upon many things in the Summer Garden, but that they possess more interest in life than mere abstract philosophy is testified by the frequent appearances of Peter and Finella.

Mr. Arthur Dillons' "Lete Suppliant," now in preparation, and shortly to be published by Mr. Elkin Mathews, is modelled in the form of Greek drama.

Mr. Elliot Stock announces for immediate publication a new work, by M. A. Faber, upon the life and work of our Lord, entitled: "The Life Indeed, Jesus Christ the Saviour of the World."

The hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Paine is being marked by the issue by Messrs. Watts & Co., in cheap form and unabridged, of the well-known "Life of Thomas Paine," by the late Dr. Moncure D. Conway, and of a companion volume at the same price (2s. 6d.), entitled "The Writings of Thomas Paine," which includes "The Age of Reason," "Rights of Man," and a selection from Paine's miscellaneous political writings.

May Aldington, whose new novel, "Meg of the Salt-Pans," just published by Messrs. Everett & Co., has been well received, has written a volume of poems entitled: "Songs of Life and Love." Mrs. Aldington is descended from the family of John Gay, the poet of the Fables, and the writer of "The Beggar's Opera."

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately a new novel by Collette Yver, entitled: "The Doctor Wife." This book, which is known by its original title as "Princesses de Science," and has been translated by Anna Countess de Bremont, is a story dealing with a question of the work of a young Frenchwoman doctor, and her difficulty in choosing between the vocation of a wife and that of a woman of science.

The new educational and technical works of Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. include: "The Political History of England; Vol. 9—From the Accession of Anne to the Death of George II. (1702–1760)," by I. S. Leadam, M.A. With 8 Maps; 8vo. "An Elementary Treatment of the Theory of Spinning Tops and Gyroscopic Motion," by Harold Crabtree, M.A., Assistant-Master at the Charterhouse, Godalming. With numerous illustrations. 8vo. "Artificial Manures: their Chemical Selection and Scientific Application to Agriculture," by M. Georges Ville, translated and edited by Sir William Crookes, D.Sc., F.R.S.; new edition, revised; illustrated. "Trades for London Girls and How to Enter Them: a Companion book to 'Trades for London Boys.'" Compiled by the Apprenticeship and Skilled Employment Association, 36 and 37, Denison House, Vauxhall Bridge Road, S.W.; 8vo. "The Vegetable Proteins," by Thomas B. Osborne, Ph.D.; ryl. 8vo. "Hydraulic Tables and Diagrams for Practical Engineers," by Captain A. ff. Garrett, R.E., Executive Engineer, Indian Public Works Department.

All interested in Italian art from the time of the first Christian monuments to the present day, should note that Herr Karl W. Hiersemann of 8, Königstrasse, Leipzig, has just published an annotated list of over thirteen hundred different works on the subject in his Antiquarian Book List, No. 368.

Messrs. Sands & Co. will shortly publish, at 6d. net, "Cupid at the Counter," by the author of "Tommy Brown."

The Oxford University Press announces a new edition of Spenser's works in three handsome library volumes, printed in Fell type. "The Faery Queene," which has been edited by Mr. J. C. Smith, will be ready before long; it fills two volumes, and is a reprint of the 1596 edition, collated with other early editions. The third volume, containing Spenser's other work, is being edited by Dr. de Sélincourt, Professor of English Literature at Birmingham University.

Mr. Percy White, author of "The West-End," has completed a novel for Messrs. Hurst & Blackett, which they publish under the title of "The House of Intrigue."

"The History of Pembrokeshire," by the Rev. James Phillips, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

What is not only the longest but by far the most important book which has yet come from the pen of Mrs. Havelock Ellis, is published by Mr. Alston Rivers. "Attainment," as the new novel is entitled, is the story of a young girl who comes to London from her quiet home in Cornwall and is plunged into the midst of all the new movements which were starting into life at the end of last century. She has a passion for social experiments, and is in turn captured and disillusioned by philanthropy, revolutionary socialism, ethical culture, theosophy and the simple life, until finally, learning wisdom by her experiences and mistakes, she reaches the "attainment" which brings her satisfaction. Mrs. Ellis is intimately acquainted with the movements she describes, and the reader will be able to detect many well known people under a thin disguise in her pages.

Mr. F. G. Brabant, who has already written of Sussex in the "Little Guides" series, describes the county with much greater detail in a book which Messrs. Methuen are publishing under the title "Rambles in Sussex." These excursions include the whole county. Among the thirty illustrations are reproductions of six of Turner's Sussex views, recently sold at Christie's.

Another volume (the 34th) is about to be added to Messrs. Methuen's series of "Little Guides." It is "Monmouthshire," by Dr. G. W. Wade and the Rev. J. H. Wade, authors of a previous volume on Somerset.

Mr. Pett Ridge's popular novel "Erb" is about to be issued at 6d. by Messrs. Methuen. It forms the next volume of the "Novelist" series.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish on June 7th, under the title of "The Papacy: the Idea and its Exponents," a succinct and comprehensive work in one volume, by Professor G. Krüger.

The Ruskin Nature Reader (Intermediate section) is designed upon the same plan as the Senior book published by Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. last autumn, and contains a collection of extracts taken from the works of well-known writers on Natural History. It is intended to emphasise that aspect of nature which Ruskin has indicated as the first appeal which nature makes to us, by its poetry. Unlike many series of Nature Readers published, which supply a course of object lessons, these books are calculated to stimulate the young readers to make observations for themselves, and therefore may be used to accompany the course of Nature Study followed in any school.

Among many novel readers the name of W. E. Norris is taken to represent high quality in present-day fiction. His work is always capable and forceful. "The Perjurer," which comes from Messrs. Constable, will be found equal in interest to most of Mr. Norris's well-known studies.

The religious communities in Germany, like those of this country, have become deeply interested in the Rev. Harry Bisseker's little work, entitled "Problems of Discipleship," published in this country as recently as last autumn. It has already nearly run through two editions and a German edition, which has now been called for, will be issued very shortly.

"No Rheumatism: How to Cure Rheumatism, Gout, Lumbago and Rheumatoid Arthritis, and prevent their Recurrence, by Natural Means," is the title of a new booklet by Dr. Arnold Eiloart, which Mr. Fifield will shortly publish. "Winning a Living on Four Acres: being the Further Experiences of a Small Holder," by Fred. A. Morton, author of "The Simple Life on Four Acres," is also announced for this month by the same publisher, together with "Tennyson as a Thinker," by Mr. Henry S. Salt.

Antiquarian booksellers and collectors who are interested in Americana, including maps, heraldry, topography, railways, &c., should see lists Nos. 14 and 16 of Mr. F. C. PART IV. of "Trees and Shrubs of the British Isles" (J. M. Dent & Co.) has just been published. It contains an excellent coloured plate of Berberis vulgaris, or the common barberry.

Brasenose College and Special Education

LORD CURZON, Chancellor of Oxford University, speaking in Latin at the celebration of the four hundredth birthday of Brasenose College, in conferring the degree of Doctor of Civil Law on the Principal of the College, Mr. Heberden, said:—

> Distinguished sir, diligent, beloved, and one who has merited well, both of the Muses and of the University, I am desired to salute you as the foremost member of the most vigorous and generous College of Brasenose, which to-day, with you as Principal, has happily completed its four hundredth year. I, by my authority, and that of the whole University, admit you to the degree of Doctor of Civil Law, honoris causa.

The Visitor of the College, the Bishop of Lincoln, in addressing those present at the celebration, very wisely pointed out that there had been great waste of time and power in compelling men to continue to study subjects which they had little or no natural capacity to learn. Of late years there had been, indeed, great progress in removing this difficulty. The area of knowledge had been widely extended by the introduction of schools in their own University, and by founding new universities whose chief aim was to promote the study of branches of knowledge of which formerly they heard but little or nothing. There had been in recent years a great increase of educational opportunity offered in, and through, their universities, and many had fully availed themselves of these privileges. But there still appeared to him to be much unperfected and imperfectly directed power among them, which might be of great value in raising and uniting society not only in their own country, but regarding humanity as a whole.

They had increased the area of the subjects of education, might they not hope to increase the number of efficient labourers in the world? For four hundred years Brasenose College had continued to teach many generations of men. If it pleased God, might it so continue to labour, and might the work they were able to inaugurate increase the area of its influence for God's glory and the true happiness of their fellow men.

Bodleian Books to be Treated like Old Port

ON June 1st, in Convocation, the decree accepting the offer of the Trustees of the Oxford University Endowment Fund to pay for the construction of an underground chamber for the storage of books belonging to the Bodleian Library was passed by 119 to 28.

It may be all right, but unless they are bad books, or worthless books, they should be placed under the influence of fresh air, sweetness and light in an upper chamber, not in a vault. To construct a healthy damp-proof underground chamber is almost an impossibility.

The Daily Chronicle on the Nimble Sevenpenny Novel

ELIZABETH AND HER GERMAN GARDEN; FOREST LOVERS, by Maurice Hewlett; THE HOUSE OF MIRTH, by Edith Wharton, and other novels. London, Macmillan, 7d. net each.

THE STRONGEST OF ALL THINGS, by E. Maria Albanesi; THE YOUNGEST MISS MOWBRAY, by B. M. Croker. London, Hurst & Blackett, 7d. net each.

"He came, he saw, he conquered." The "sevenpenny" came, was seen, and apparently has conquered its readers. For here we have the commencing volumes of two new series, and possibly other publishing houses will follow Macmillan and Hurst and Blackett, who have followed Nelson and Collins.

The Situation

Certainly the public is fortunate in getting good recent novels, in a perfectly good cloth binding, and in a handy form, for sevenpence. Whether the thing be quite so good for authors, publishers, and booksellers is a matter on which, just now, there is much debate. The fact is that when some new departure has been made in books and has become popular, everybody is more or less compelled to join in—directly or indirectly.

The last word really rests with the author, and he, or she, is naturally attracted by the great circulation of a story which a sevenpenny edition makes possible. The cheapening of English books is still in process, and what we have is one phase of that evolution—a phase, perhaps, which is too recent for a final judgment yet.

What will Happen?

Somebody asks, Is the six-shilling novel threatened by the "sevenpenny"? Scarcely. Somebody else asks whether new novels at a florin net, such as are promised, will not "knock" the six-shilling novel, as the "three-volumer" was "knocked." Scarcely, again, one would answer; but we shall just have to wait and see.

Meanwhile here are "sevenpennies" very attractive in contents, being by well-known writers, and more than serviceable as bound volumes. Even the book-lover, a person difficult to please, will like the get-up of the Macmillan "sevenpennies"—a quiet, blue binding, with a bookish note in it, as befits so literary a novel, say, as Mr. Maurice Hewlett's "Forest Lovers."

The sixpenny reprint in paper covers used to monopolise the summer reader, but it will have a task to maintain itself against the "sevenpenny," which is so much better "dressed." "Sixpennies" are bought, read, and thrown away and "sevenpennies" are kept, and if the buying and keeping of them mean that the people are learning to buy more books, why, that, anyhow, is all to the good.

PARTS 14, 12 and 15 respectively of Beautiful Flowers, The National Gallery, and Wild Beasts of the World, have just been published (T. C. & E. C. Jack).

Glasgow Trade Notes

By ST. MUNGO

Meredith, Swinburne, and Davidson

THE fact that when a man dies the public begin to take an interest in him and his work induces the bookseller sometimes to entertain uncharitable thoughts regarding some of his fellow men; this, however, does not apply in the present instances.

Of the men of might who have recently been removed from the literary world, George Meredith takes the first place amongst Glasgow booklovers, and the demand for the excellent pocket edition of his works proves the contention that the half-crown novel pays; a necessary feature, however, that has been omitted from the calculation of some of its supporters is that the public do not buy a book because the price is half a crown.

"Diana of the Crossways," "Richard Feverel," and "The Egoist" are perhaps the first favourites, and although those who know aver that to properly understand his poetry one must read it a dozen times, the small edition in two volumes has had a very large sale.

Swinburne also has a large following here, but his circle of readers would be much wider if his works could be obtained at a reasonable figure, and should his publisher issue his complete works in an edition somewhat similar to the complete Browning, it would be an immediate success.

Since his death there has been a considerable demand for his books. The six-volume edition of the poems has sold very well, and also the small though unsatisfactory volume of selections.

"Tristram of Lyonesse" and "Atalanta in Calydon," and his recent volume of literary studies, "The Age of Shakespeare," have proved to be amongst his most popular prose.

The death of Marion Crawford has not made any visible increase in the sale of his books, but the works of this popular novelist always sell well on publication, and his earlier books go steadily.

The tragic disappearance of John Davidson has had a special appeal to the West of Scotland, as he belonged to this part of the country. Born at Barrhead in Renfrewshire in 1857, his family later removed to Greenock, where he was educated and where he entered the commercial world. Commerce, however, was not his metier, and we find him publishing his first book in 1877, when he was only twenty years of age; this was a dramatic poem entitled "An Unhistorical Pastoral."

With due deference to Mr. William Watson's letter to The Times, only a small section of the public cared for his work, and to charge the nation with his death is somewhat absurd.

He wrote poetry, but not the poetry that the public desired at the moment, and his system of philosophy, "God and Mammon," did not add to the circle of admirers of this uncompromising and sometimes fantastic iconoclast.

"The Methods of Mr. Mosher"

[MR. W. DOWNING of the Chaucer's Head Library, Birmingham, sends us a page from Literature of November 20th, 1897, containing the following letter.]

To the Editor of Literature.

SIR,—I notice in your last issue that you publish the fact that among the latest specimens of Mr. Thomas B. Mosher's methods was the publication of a collection of Pater's Essays. It will throw further light upon the ways of this American publisher if we add now that these Essays from the Guardian were privately printed in a very few copies for his personal friends, with the sanction of Mr. Pater's executors and sisters, who did not wish these Essays to be lost, yet particularly expressed, in the Preface of the book, their determination never to reprint them or include them in the series of their brother's published works. Such a statement would naturally be considered to be final. To reprint these Essays after this was an act on a par with that of a man who should make his way into a house during the absence of its owners by bribing the servants, and should then copy the private papers which he finds there.

I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,

THEODORE A. COOK.

Fresh News about Wellington's Peninsular Campaign

THE number of officers who kept diaries or wrote readable letters during the Peninsular War was extraordinarily large, and the historians have made good use of such a rich store of material. Still the supply is not ended or the demand for such reading satisfied. Mr. Murray is shortly publishing a handsome volume of "Letters from the Peninsula," which were written home during the years 1808 to 1812 by Lieutenant-General Sir William Warre, the uncle of the late Headmaster of Eton, who has acted as the editor. William Warre was born in Portugal, and was intended for a commercial career, but destiny, or rather, a tendency to practical joking, intervened and so he became a soldier and a distinguished officer. The means of the practical joke in William Warre's case were sealing-wax and a wig.

these are high class songs, and are produced in Messrs. Novello's customary good taste. A number of part songs for quartet; Cecil J. Sharp's arrangement of Folk Dance Airs for the piano, and The Fakenham Ghost, a cantata, by B. Luard-Selby, complete a remarkably good selection.

We must not omit a mention of Emily R. Daymond's Score Reading Exercises intended for the use of candidates for the A.R.C.O., and other examinations.

The following music is from Mr. Robert Culley (25–35, City Road), At Close of Day, a duet for Soprano and Tenor, by Arthur G. Colborn; God, that Madest Earth and Heaven, a sacred song, also by A. G. Colborn; and Soul-Music, by Henri Lamarqué; three very charming songs.

Two sacred cantatas by Arthur Pearson, the Song of Songs, and From Cross to Crown; also a selection of anthems, vesper hymns, carols, &c.

Organ for the "New Theology"

THE Modernist and "New Theology" controversies have had an interesting sequel. In consequence of the growing need for an organ of the progressive movement in religion and social ethics, a number of well-known men have constituted themselves an editorial board for the Christian Commonwealth, which will in future be of a more comprehensive and representative character than hitherto. The members of the new board include Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A. (Chairman), the Dean of Durham (Dr. Kitchin), Prof. T. K. Cheyne, F.B.A., D.D., Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A., LL.D., Prof. L. P. Jacks, M.A. (Editor of Hibbert Journal), Rev. A. W. Hutton, M.A. (Rector St. Mary-le-Bow), Rev. T. Rhondda Williams, Mr. Philip Snowden, M.P., Sir Richard Stapley, J.P. Mr. Albert Dawson continues as Editor-in-Chief. Sir Oliver Lodge, Canon Barnett, Father Tyrrell, Rev. A. L. Lilley, M.A., and others are announced as contributors.

"Kingsley," "Thackeray," and "Esmond" Hotels

THESE three Temperance Hotels are situated close together in one of the healthiest districts of London. They are all very near the British Museum, the Thackeray Hotel being directly opposite, the Esmond adjoining, and the Kingsley within two minutes' walk of that famous place of interest.

The Kingsley and the Thackeray Hotels are modern in all their arrangements, convenient, substantial, and well-appointed. They are furnished with careful regard to comfort, and the aim has been to supply the conveniences and advantages of the very large licensed hotels at moderate charges.

Both the Kingsley and Thackeray Hotels are fitted with lifts to all floors, lighted throughout by electricity, and have bathrooms on every floor.

The Esmond Hotel is comparatively small, and is appreciated by those who desire to combine economy with pleasure or business when visiting London.

These hotels are most favourably situated for visitors who wish to see London.

The inclusive charge for bedroom, attendance, table d'hôte, breakfast and dinner at the Kingsley and Thackeray Hotels is from 8s. 6d.—10s. 6d. per day, and at the Esmond Hotel, 7s. 6d.—9s. per day. Intending visitors should write for prospectus of the hotels, it contains full particulars with tariff and other information. Telegraphic address: "Bookcraft, London." Telephone Number: Gerrard 4253.

EDWARD HOWELL'S BOOKSTORE OF OLD AND NEW BOOKS

83, CHURCH STREET, LIVERPOOL

WE have much pleasure in giving the portraits of the present partners in the widely known and greatly respected house of Edward Howell, of Liverpool, viz.: Mr. Edward Howell, son of the founder, Mr. Edward Howell, who died in 1895, and his grandsons, Mr. Edward S. Arthur and Mr. Frank R. Howell. Mr. E. S. Arthur is a son of Mr. John S. Arthur, who joined Edward Howell in 1851, married his eldest daughter (who died in 1872) in 1860, and retired in 1900.

One of the first things connected with publishing which the writer of this little notice remembers was in 1869 hearing Mr. Edward Marston calling out the names of the booksellers as he opened the mail of Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., and it was rare indeed for a mail not to contain an order from Mr. Edward Howell of Liverpool, who had been pleasantly known to Mr. E. M. for many years previously, and who was always pleasantly referred to by him.

The founder of the house, Mr. Edward Howell, was born on August 7th, 1819, at Everton, his father being a bookbinder. He was apprenticed to Mr. Johnson, then a leading bookseller in Liverpool, and afterwards opened a shop in Park Lane and commenced business on his own account as a new and second-hand bookseller. He afterwards removed to 6, Church Street, where he took over the business of Mr. Perris, removing later to No. 28, Church Street, in which leading thoroughfare—the Strand of Liverpool—the business is still carried on at No. 83.

In addition to bookselling Mr. Howell did a certain amount of publishing, including "Selections from the American and English Poets"; Davis's "History of the Inquisition"; Grocott's "Index of Familiar Quotations," of which many editions have been published; Ramage's "Beautiful Thoughts," which was eventually purchased by his friend George Routledge, who afterwards founded the great London publishing house. Referring to the late Mr. Howell, the Liverpool Mercury of May 3rd, 1895, said: "The name of Howell has been for about half a century most prominently and honourably associated with Liverpool as a publisher and bookseller of repute. Pleasant and attractive in manner, most wise and discreet in his judgment, and fully conversant with all the leading literary productions of the period of his active life, he was in all circumstances a gentleman, displaying the sterling qualities of a true friend."

MR. EDWARD HOWELL

In 1896 Mr. Howell published an interesting little work of his own, entitled "The Birthplace and Childhood of Napoleon," by Edward Howell (Howell-ap-Howell), with 18 photographs. It went through two editions, and was by permission dedicated to Mr. W. E. Gladstone.

What was so well said of the founder of the firm is equally true of the present members, who are very popular, both as business men and among a wide circle of friends. They are developing the business largely and mainly on the original lines, keeping in touch with the leading book collectors of the North of England, and indeed of the English speaking world, for the firm's catalogue, to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of copies, has made it known far and wide. Among Messrs. Howell's recent publications was "Annals of the Liverpool Stage from the Earliest Period to the Present Time," by R. J. Broadbent, with illustrations, and this coming autumn they will publish an important work, including much hitherto unpublished antiquarian lore, entitled "History and Antiquities of Wales from the Earliest Period to the Present Time," by O. Morien Morgan. All who know the firm will join in a hearty wish for their continued prosperity. They constitute one of Liverpool's most useful assets.

GOOD STORY OF THE LONDON CABBY.—At the present time, when public attention is being directed to the hardships of the London cabby, owing to the competition of the taxi-cab, a story which is vouched for by Mr. J. Nayler, manager of Gardening Illustrated and Farm and Home, may not be uninteresting. Some time ago, when he was manager for Mr. T. Fisher Unwin in the Adelphi, one of the young lady typists was taken ill. She was sent to her home in Battersea in a hansom, accompanied by another lady worker from the same office. When asked what there was to pay, cabby inquired mysteriously whether the fare was to be paid by the young lady or the firm. He was told that was nothing to do with him so long as he got what was due to him. But cabby did not see it. "It's this way, miss," said he. "I have daughters of my own, and I know what might happen to them, and if that young girl has to pay for this here cab, the fare is nothing; but if the firm is going to pay, then it's half-a-crown." The staff at the office, when they heard the story, felt that here was a man and a brother. One wonders if the London taxi-man can beat this little incident.

The Original Admirable Crichton!

AMONG the phrases which are to a certain extent stereotyped in the English language "Admirable Crichton" is one that is invaluable. It expresses what no two other words can—the highest pitch of all-round excellence that it is possible for a human being to attain. But how many people know who the hero of the phrase was? To most he is a name and nothing more. Accordingly, there is ample room for an excellent brochure by Mr. Douglas Crichton, F.S.A. Scot., entitled "The Admirable Crichton: The Real Character," published by L. Upcott Gill, London, for 1s. net, which is to lead the way to a more elaborate biography. Crichton was another Chatterton, "the marvellous boy that perished in his prime." The Admirable one entered St. Andrews University when he was nine years old. Three years later he became a Bachelor of Arts, and at the age of fourteen he took his Artium Magister degree. At his twentieth year he spoke ten languages, could never forget anything he ever heard, was philosopher, theologian, mathematician, orator, fencer, dancer, horseman. In his person he was "extremely beautiful." When one reads that "he was also able to discourse upon political questions with much solidity," it will be gathered that this Apollo was a prodigy of prodigies, and the light Mr. Crichton sheds on the somewhat mysterious career of his great namesake is indeed welcome.—Edinburgh Evening Dispatch.

A Pocket Lexicon and Concordance to the Temple Shakespeare

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co. have just published a charming little pocket Lexicon and Concordance to their Temple Shakespeare, prepared by Marian Edwards.

It contains a valuable glossarial index and quotations from the chief authorities in interpretation of the more obscure passages, accompanied by as full a concordance as possible. The illustrations have been chosen as a result of most careful search at the British Museum.

As the references are to the scenes, acts, and plays in which the words are used, the utility of the book is not confined merely to one edition of Shakespeare.

DAY'S LIBRARY'S QUARTERLY LIST of Surplus Library Books and others is to hand, embracing works in almost every branch of literature, some of which are now out of print and scarce. This list contains some 4,000 books, in good condition, which are offered at greatly reduced prices. The latest additions of recent publications amount to over 700. A useful catalogue.

Specimen Copies.—We shall be pleased to send free of charge a few specimen copies of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR to any who will apply for same and distribute them to the best advantage. Send a postcard to Manager, PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR Office 19, Adam Street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Mr. John Trevena

A BAR to originality in authorship is the reading of current fiction. Distinction of style cannot thus be cultivated, nor will depth of thought be developed. Mr. John Trevena, the Dartmoor novelist, whose stories are gaining an international repute, appears to lead a secluded life in his Dartmoor retreat, shunning not only his fellow-workers in literature, but also their literary works. He cannot see how it is possible for a writer to be original if he reads the books of the day. He is said to be a good classical scholar, and to have a good classical library which he reads. The newspapers he does not disdain, for in them he thinks the life of a country and real human nature are to be found. The village people about him, too, he studies with care, and no one has depicted the Dartmoor manners and customs and inhabitants so faithfully. From his publishers' account of him it appears that "when working he often retires to a lonely little cottage on the top of a hill with a fine view of the tors. There he lives absolutely alone with his dogs, doing his own cooking and housework for months together. Often he does not speak to anyone for over a week. He seems to be a source of some terror to the nearest village, as the people, who are still superstitious, regard him as a magician." Physical frailty as well as natural inclination seems to have imposed the simple life on Mr. Trevena, who declares, characteristically: "My aim above all is to preach not so much kindliness as ordinary justice towards animals; and to remind men and women that they are animals too."—Chicago Dial.

Biography of Mr. R. C. Morgan, Editor and Publisher

THE Biography of the late Mr. Richard Cope Morgan should prove one of the most attractive books of recent years, rich in manifold interest, especially regarding the chief religious revivals that have stirred this country since the days of Whitefield and Wesley. Mr. Morgan made his mark in religious journalism as the founder, and for close on fifty years the Editor, of the popular periodical known at first as The Revival, but since 1870 as The Christian.

Mr. Morgan, who was also head of the well-known publishing firm of Morgan & Scott, became a prominent figure in the organising and financing of many of the philanthropic and missionary endeavours which marked the later Victorian period, his paper forming a felicitous link between Churchmen and Nonconformists. Mr. Morgan's intimate relations with leaders of the Evangelical school of thought, from the sixties onward, as well as with Messrs. Moody and Sankey and other American notabilities, foreshadow a volume of world-wide value. The Biography, which is to be fully illustrated, has been written by his son, Mr. George E. Morgan, M.A.

The book is to be issued immediately by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Ltd., and the price will be five shillings.

The Aero

The New Penny Air Travel Paper

BOOKSELLERS and newsagents should note that Messrs. Iliffe & Sons, Ltd., who are always well to the front, have brought out a new penny illustrated weekly called The Aero, which will interest all who care about travel in the air. We were much amused the other day at the club when a friend, after referring to the wonderful exploits of Count Zeppelin and the Wright Brothers and the future of air travel said in the most matter of fact way, "Will it be confined to our system?" Who can say?

Modern Subjects in School Teaching

WITH the rapid and extensive developments of the Council and Municipal Secondary Schools in England there has arisen a very special interest in the place and function of modern subjects in those schools. Professor Watson, an author well known for his researches in educational history, is publishing directly, through Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., a work entitled "The Beginnings of the Teaching of Modern Subjects in England." His purpose is to present the essential facts and circumstances relating to their introduction into our school curricula. In doing so, he gives, where it is possible, reference to dates and places of the earliest inclusions of any modern subject, as, for instance, in School Statutes or Orders. He also furnishes bibliographical details concerning the earliest text-books. A single volume containing the varied information which Professor Watson has compiled has long been needed.

The Englishman in Exile

" Feels for her as a lover or a child."
Wordsworth.

[These fine verses, fragrant with the most delicate fragrance of patriotism, by the late F. Edmund Garrett, are given by permission of the Editor of the "Empire Review."—R. B. M.]

Not hers are the eternal snows,
The illimitable plain,
The year-long blooms; but O, the rose
That scents an English lane!
And other isles breathe kindlier air
And fret a bluer wave,
And other women are as fair;
But none so brave.

Her feet are on the ocean ways;
Her prime is yet unsung:
Beneath her laurels and her bays
My England's eyes are young.
Her speech is in the wind, and wins
New peoples unawares,
Till the consenting planet spins
To English airs.

The happy English mate and build
Among her elms and spires;
They love her well, whose largess filled
The lap of their desires.
The exile, derelict of fate,
Must love her unpossessed;
But O, 'tis not the fortunate
That love the best!

For whom adventure, or disease,
Or need, or duty draws
To strange, warm Englands overseas,
Or soil of alien laws;
Even they, remote on languid coasts
And under skies of flame,
Like sentries at forgotten posts
Guard her dear name.

Mother, the sons that see thy face,
Not these it haunts in sleep!
Mistress, where all confess thy grace
No lover's blade need leap!
Far, far from the beloved's eyes
'Tis mine to serve unknown:
Content thy servant lives and dies,
Since thine alone.

It is a bit of a shock to find in the same review an exhortation "To Arms!" in verse by the President of the Poet's Club, in which the youth and strength of England are told to throw away their "useless sports" and "train the cannons, man the forts." We cannot pretend to criticise the President of the Poet's Club's poetry, but if this verse is poetry we are sorry—

Youth and strength of England,
Honour all who lead the way,
The Territorial Army,
As it gathers day by day;
Crowd to its ranks of Patriots,
Ere, for your country's good,
The Rulers have to force you there
With methods sharp and rude.

If Mr. Henry Simpson had been exhorting the youth and strength of Scotland he could have put "gude" instead of "good." How, not only a poet, but the President of poets, can make rude rhyme with good we do not understand.

Notes from Provincial Towns

[Under this heading we publish every week brief notes of book matters from the various provincial towns. We invite our readers to send us any items likely to be of any interest and use to the trade generally. A supply of stamped addressed Report Forms will be sent on application.]

FROME

Lovers of the "Pilgrim's Progress" may be interested to know that a contemporary portrait in oils of its author, John Bunyan, has just been discovered, begrimed with dirt and dust, among an accumulation of old pictures and prints in a little shop not far from Frome by Mr. Bates, bookseller, of Catherine Street. Recognising the features of the immortal "John" beneath its veil of dirt an application of cold water soon disclosed the following inscription:—"John Bunyan, etat 56, T.K. pinxt." The artist has depicted Bunyan in the sombre brown dress of the period, with the white lace collar—under his right arm he is holding a book.—The Somerset Standard.

GLASGOW

We regret to hear that Mr. Robert Irvine Brown of the firm of Jas. Brown & Co., of Pollokshields, Glasgow, died at his residence on May 30th.

GUILDFORD

May and June are always quiet months in the book trade in this town, but since the death of George Meredith there has been a considerable demand for his works, especially "Diana of the Crossways."

Crossways Farm House, one of the most interesting of Surrey farmhouses, is well known by country lovers in this district.

LUTON

In view of the approaching demolition of the existing Library Buildings in order that the new Carnegie Library may be erected, the Lending Department has been closed, and no books will be issued until further notice.

The Newspaper and Reading Rooms will remain open in the existing building until June 9th, and will be then transferred to the Assembly Rooms at the Town Hall.

The post of librarian is now held by Mr. Johnson.

MANCHESTER

During the last week or two there has been a good demand for light holiday reading, holiday guide books, Baedeker, Baddeley, Ward, Lock, and others; maps for the tourist, motorist and cyclist, military maps and text-books. Apart from this there is nothing much stirring in the book trade here. The year so far has been a very indifferent one—there has been a want of any conspicuous book to give a spurt to business. We want something to "boom." Not "Sevenpennies."

Our friends, Messrs. Brady & Lawlor, seem to be going ahead as wholesalers and retailers. We understand they have just opened a huge shop and warehouse in London Road for the sale of "High class literature on interesting subjects," stationery, &c.

READING

Mr. Thomas Thorp has had a "find" in a collection of autograph letters recently purchased, of a Napoleonic document of great historic interest, signed in the autograph of the Emperor, addressed to Count Savary, and believed to be unpublished.

Bookselling quiet except for sevenpenny editions. Mr. H. M. Wallis' book "As it Happened," has been enquired for at the libraries, and the author has been put on the Public Library Committee.

Obituary

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. R. I. Brown, of Glasgow, editor of Brown's "Nautical Almanac," who passed away on May 30th at his residence in the suburbs of Glasgow. Brown's "Nautical Almanac" is a household word in Shipping circles, and has been the trusty guide to mariners the world wide during the past thirty years in which it has been in circulation and so ably edited and managed by the late Mr. Brown. The interests of the firm of James Brown & Son, we may say, is ably represented in the person of his eldest son, Mr. J. R. Brown, who for some time prior to his father's illness had entire control of the business.

The Johnson Bicentenary Celebration at Lichfield

Proposed Exhibition

SIR,—In connection with the bicentenary of the birth of Dr. Samuel Johnson it is proposed to hold an Exhibition of Johnsonian Manuscripts, Books, Portraits, Pictures, Relics, &c., at Lichfield, in September next.

As Mayor of the City I have been asked to appeal to all those who possess mementoes of our great citizen to allow them to be placed on public view on that occasion. To make the Exhibition as representative and reminiscent as possible it has been resolved to allow books, papers and articles to be sent either on loan or sale. All goods will be adequately insured, and the utmost care exercised to prevent damage and to return them in safety to their owners.

I venture, therefore, to ask all lovers of Johnson to co-operate in this undertaking and to assist in making the Exhibition worthy of the name and fame of the great man of letters, whose memory we desire to commemorate.

All communications should be addressed to the Town Clerk, Guildhall, Lichfield, by whom every information will be given.

I have the honour to be,
Yours faithfully,
H. M. MORGAN,
Mayor of Lichfield.

June 1st.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST

An Introductory History of England. From the Earliest Times till the Year 1815. By C. R. L. FLETCHER, M.A., formerly Fellow of All Souls' and Magdalen Colleges, Oxford.

With Coloured and other Maps, Plans and Index.

Vol. I.—From the Earliest Times to the End of the Middle Ages. 5s.
Vol. II.—From Henry VII. to the Restoration. 5s.

Vols. III. and IV. Just Published,

Vol. III.—From Charles II. to the beginning of the Great War. 5s.
Vol. IV.—The Great European War. 5s.

These volumes conclude Mr. Fletcher's "Schoolboy's" History of England, of which the first volume appeared in 1904.

Owing to the length and importance of the period covered it has been found necessary to divide it into two portions, of which the first takes the reader down to the year 1792, and the second to 1815.

There are separate chapters on Scotland, Ireland, India, and the Industrial Revolution.

Textes et Questions. By W. MANSFIELD POOLE, M.A., Head of the Modern Language Department, Royal Naval College, Osborne, and E. L. LASSIMONNE, Officier de l'Instruction Publique, Senior Master, Royal Naval College, Osborne. 1s. 6d.

Grammaire Française Élémentaire. With Exercises. By W. MANSFIELD POOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

The Penny "Whittier"—"Poems for the Inner Life"

DEAR SIR,—In sending you a review copy of the new Penny Whittier, published by this Committee, may I point out two features which specially recommend its use :—

1. The introduction by Dr. Rufus M. Jones of America, whose "Studies in Mystical Religion," has just been published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., and the "Testimonies," by O. W. Holmes, &c.

2. The care with which the selection has been made by life-long lovers of Whittier.

Kindly favour me with a copy of any notice you may print.—Yours truly,

ERNEST E. TAYLOR.

(Hon. Sec. of the Yorkshire Quarterly Meeting of the Society of Friends. Yorkshire 1905 Committee.)

Bannisdale, Malton, Yorks.

May 25th.

P.S.—At the end of a three-column notice of Whittier's "Hymns" in the "Dictionary of Hymnology," Dr. Julian says: "These pieces are characterised by rich poetic beauty, sweet tenderness and deep sympathy with human kind."

[Glad to make known to booksellers at home and abroad this excellent penny edition of the American poet's uplifting verse, so full of the milk of human kindness. He did not despair of the human race.—ED.]

"A Dickens Dictionary"

DEAR SIR,—I wish to express my most sincere thanks for your remarks regarding my "Dickens Dictionary" in your issue of last week.

You are correct when you say that it was not until the editor of The Athenæum refused to insert my note that I wrote what he describes as of a "most discursive nature." And in the private covering letter I said "if" the reviewer could neither read nor write I would suggest giving the work to one who could do both. And even this was not discourteous, because, obviously, the editor's plea that the context of the sentence relating to "Edwin Drood" explains it is untenable. On analysis there is found to be no context, in the correct meaning of the word. And to describe as "gross carelessness" an error that might easily have happened after proof, for all the reviewer could know to the contrary, is neither good taste nor good reviewing as I understand both.

If you will permit me a few more lines I would point out in reply to the letter of the editor of The Athenæum that (1) it is not a matter of opinion, but one of fact, as the editor will find on referring to a good handy dictionary of the English language. In regard to 2, it was left open to the reader of the review to suppose that the entry in question is under "Mr." "Carker," or "Junior," with a strong bias in favour of the last. If, in 3, the reviewer did not wish it to be understood that the arrangement of the initials was wrong, why did he labour the point to the extent he did? In 5, the editor of The Athenæum appears to have made his case worse, if that were possible. Certainly I have used press cuttings. The identifications of Eatanswill, of one of the prototypes of Muggleton, of the Honeymoon House at Chalk, of the "Ship" and of Joe Gargery's Forge, have all been due in a very large degree to the periodical press of the last few years.

The editor of The Athenæum quotes, "Another protoype of Sam (Weller) has been suggested in Andrew Fairservice," and says he regards the statement as the "wildest of conjecture"; but I cannot think he means what he says, viz., that I am making a "wild conjecture" when I say that "another prototype has been suggested." He may only wish to convey the idea that the original suggestion was a wild conjecture. I have been unable to examine the mass of notes made for the work and now stored away, but so far as my memory serves me this was not taken from a press cutting "at all."

The editor is at some pains to drag in the "Dickens Dictionary" of Messrs. Pierce & Wheeler; but as this contains only a small portion of the information and material found in my book I am afraid the editor of The Athenæum, as he still adheres to his private definition of a dictionary, must condemn that book as being worse than "of little value," if he has the least regard for consistency. And how, by the way, can a book be more accurate?

I am, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
ALEX. J. PHILIP.

["More accurate" is quite correct. It does not mean exact. Two watches may be properly described as accurate, and yet one be more accurate than the other.—ED.]

"Millions of Potential Readers"

DEAR SIR,—I was somewhat surprised to read in the Report of the Committee of the Authors' Society, which you reprint in your issue of May 15th, that "there are millions of potential readers in the country who cannot get books for want of bookshops." I gather from the preceding paragraphs that what it is intended to convey is that were a novel issued in a primary form at 7d., those who at present subscribe to libraries, because of the prohibitive price of 6s., would then buy copies instead of borrowing them. There would thus be such a large circulation that it would pay to issue novels in this way; but further, that the great difficulties in the way of such an issue are the lack of bookshops, and the inadequacy of the means of distribution.

Is not this rather a reflection on the booksellers? I venture to think that whilst they may not be anxious to see a more extensive cheapening of books, they would welcome, and be easily able to cope with, a more extensive and increased demand for books. So far as my experience in the West of England and S. Wales goes, I find no lack of bookshops, but I do constantly hear of a lack of customers. The shelves of the booksellers testify to their desire to cater for all classes and conditions of readers in the realm of fiction, and I know a good many who would be glad to meet some of these "potential readers" in search of bookshops.—Faithfully yours,

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER.

Hereford.

More Daylight Saving

DEAR SIR,—It would seem as if we, of Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd., have also been enjoying a privilege beyond the scope of the proposed Daylight Saving Bill. For many years past it has been the practice during the summer months to close the offices at 5 p.m., instead of 6 p.m., without requiring the staff to start an hour earlier in the morning. We are unanimously in agreement with "One of the Staff" of Messrs. Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., that this is "real Daylight Saving." Trusting that you will be able to find room for this short note.—Yours faithfully,

A CASSELLITE.

[We understand the staff of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin have enjoyed the same privilege for a number of years, and that it is greatly appreciated.—ED.]

Educational Books and Net Prices.

DEAR SIR,—I'm glad my letter, issued in your valuable paper, re net school books, has interested one of its readers; but I wish to correct a wrong impression "An Educational Bookseller" has made in the reading of it. My suggestion is "that all future new books and new revised editions for school use shall be published at net prices." I never dreamed of such a thing as altering the prices of those already on the market. As regards educational authorities and their purchases, let them pay net prices, why should they be favoured with special terms? They only buy what they want, the same as a private individual. Put them on the same basis as the libraries—net books to be net in any numbers, no matter where purchased, and then and not until then will our own local authorities find out that they can obtain most of their books from one or more of their own ratepayers, as cheaply as from any outsider, and with much better satisfaction—because nine times out of ten their orders will be completed and delivered more promptly. Besides, the authorities will get what they order instead of being landed frequently with something which is as good (?) published by the big supply contractor himself. I know.

It is impossible to live and pay one's way on the present discount system. Net, and nothing but net, prices for educational books is our only salvation, and in conclusion let me ask those interested to line up and go for it.

Yours, &c.,
A NORTHERN BOOKSELLER.

A "New" Shakespeare

SIR,—It appears that the poor Bard of Avon will soon have to take a place in the same ranks now occupied by the giant gooseberry, the sea serpent, spirit photographs, and the author of the "Junius" letters. I read your article on M. Demblon's "discovery" with more amusement than interest. Commenting on this you hint that if M. Demblon does not look sharp he will be forestalled. That has already happened quite three years ago. It is more than strange that so ardent a disciple of Shakespeare—or Rutland—as M. Demblon is represented to be, should not have kept himself posted on the development of Shakespeare mythology, but only learned "by chance," last year, "that a learned German had arrived at the same conclusion as he had!" That, however, is perfectly true. This momentous "discovery"—if it can be called such—was made by Dr. Karl Bleibtreu some years ago, and published by him in a book entitled "The True Shakespeare," on November 28th, 1906. I enclose for your inspection six cuttings—of a column each—from The Standard of November and December, 1906, giving the whole history of how Dr. Bleibtreu found out that Shakespeare's works were written by Roger Earl of Rutland, and a review of the book. Kindly return cuttings in stamped addressed envelope enclosed.

Yours faithfully,
HENRI F. KLEIN.

[Much obliged to Mr. Klein. Since we noticed the Belgian champion in the lists against Shakespeare, Messrs. Constable & Co. inform us that they have a work proving beyond all question that Bacon was the real author; see reference to this in an article entitled "Another attack on Shakespeare." These attacks on Shakespeare are like mushrooms in an autumn cow pasture, they are really very harmless but the Shakespeareans mistake them for poisonous fungi, and suffer terribly from irritation after digesting them.—ED.],

The Booking Fee Question

DEAR SIR,—I have only just noticed in P.C. for May 22nd, that Mr. H. R. Firmin quotes me as one of the publishers who "do not charge the booking fee on parcels of under 5s. net." Either Mr. Firmin misunderstood me or I misunderstood him, for I certainly do charge the fee on parcels under 5s., although I bear it myself on amounts above that sum.—I am, yours faithfully,

A. C. FIFIELD.

On the occasion of the recent visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the Printers' Almshouses at Wood Green, their Royal Highnesses were taken to the Board Room, where Mr. J. W. Harrison was introduced, and submitted many interesting details regarding the history of The London Gazette. The Prince and Princess took the greatest interest in the first copy of The Family Herald, the inception of which was due to the owner's desire to promote work for women.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. Alden & Co., Ltd., Oxford.—"Juvenes dum Sumus," by J. E. H. Light and amusing verses on Oxford and London subjects. Some of them have already appeared in The Isis. They are neat and well-turned, but have no special quality save easiness and skill.

From Messrs. Allenson & Co.—"Man Preparing for other Worlds," by W. C. Moore. We believe this to be the first edition published in this country of a book which created some stir in America a few years ago, written by a leading Divine. When a man starts out to formulate a completely satisfactory answer to the Riddle of the Universe, we are prepared for solid reading, and we certainly find much of it packed into the 450 odd pages of this book. Mr. Moore is "one among those who take pleasure in the present unrest, as regards the old dogmas which have so long held cabalistic influence over the people," and his volume presents a new theory of the Universe in its contention that the planets and stars are at present uninhabited, but in a state of preparation for the reception of glorified man. We have said enough, perhaps, to indicate the scope and character of his work.

From the Same.—"In God's Orchard," by Rev. James Learmount. Mr. Learmount has made for himself a distinct reputation as a successful speaker to children. This new volume of his, containing as it does four complete series of addresses on subjects of great interest, will be largely welcomed. He appeals directly to the interest of young people by the relation of many bright and well-chosen anecdotes, and those who have the care of children in their hands would do well to direct their attention to Mr. Learmount's excellent book.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, Bristol, and Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.—"Josephine E. Butler: an Autobiographical Memoir," edited by George W. and Lucy A. Johnson. With Introduction by James Stuart, M.A., LL.D. Though it is more than eighty years since Josephine Butler (née Grey) first saw the light, the world is in no danger of forgetting her name and the glorious work she did. The compilers of this volume, however, have been wise in giving to the world as complete an account as possible of her life and labours, and they have done their work skilfully and well. Much of it is taken from Mrs. Butler's "Recollections of George Butler" and from "Personal Reminiscences of a Great Crusade"; but selections have also been given from most of her principal publications, so as to give some idea of her extensive literary work.

From Messrs. A. & C. Black.—"The Legend of Montrose." With Introduction and Notes by Arthur T. Flux. "The Legend of Montrose" is one of the series of "Tales of My Landlord," and is now issued in the form of a "continuous reader." It is intended for school use and will no doubt be useful in inducing young scholars to make a continuous mental effort in their reading.

From Messrs. Bosworth & Co.—"Relaxation Studies in the Muscular Discriminations required for Touch, Agility and Expression in Piano-playing," by Tobias Matthay, F.R.A.M. The scope of the book is sufficiently indicated in its title. It contains the exercise material for the study of muscular expertness in relation to piano technique. A large number of selected pieces are given with instructions designed to enable the student to conquer their technical and interpretative difficulties. Other exercises require practice apart from the keyboard. The illustrations will be found of assistance in studying the question as a whole.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co, Ltd.—"The Wreathed Dagger," by Margaret Young. We shall be surprised if this fine historical novel does not make something of a name for its author. It is full of incident, the characters are well chiselled, and the atmosphere of the time with which it deals is well suggested. Thirlby House is surrounded by Cromwell's forces, and Cromwell himself is at their head. Inside the garrison burn love, jealousy, ambition. The interest depends as much upon incident as upon character; the situations are dramatic, and never forced; and almost every chapter contains an unexpected but perfectly natural development. There is no padding; it is difficult to find even an unnecessary word; and, above all, there is no straining after effect.

From the Same.—"Adventures in London," by James Douglas. Mr. Douglas is master of the short sentence. He pulls you up at every seventh word. His style is a series of raps; his speech is staccato. The style is easy to imitate, but impossible to read for long with pleasure. Writing of him, we find ourselves involved in his manner. Nevertheless, he is alive, very wide awake, and full of curiosity about London and all that London contains. In this volume of four hundred odd pages there are ninety-five papers about holidays, dancing, eating, politics, sport, children, poverty, actors, and all the rest. It is a book for the odd half-hour, the idle moment; to sit down with it for a solid afternoon is to court impatience and boredom.

From the Same.—"The Love-Brokers," by Albert Kinross. Maurice Capel was led into marriage by an impulse of youthful chivalry; immediately after the service he left his wife, went to Greece, and made his name as a writer on art and archæology. And then, seven years after marriage, he fell in love with someone else. His wife, wishing for a divorce and he himself desiring it, negotiations were begun with a firm of shady solicitors, who bled Maurice and did nothing. Maurice had been faithful to his wife and had supported her during their long separation; but the law only grants divorce when unfaithfulness and desertion or cruelty have been proved, so a letter to his wife was concocted and he openly compromised himself. The sympathy of the author is with hero and heroine; we must affirm that we ourselves have sympathy with neither one nor the other. The fashionable complaint of appendicitis and a convenient death smoothed matters out, and Maurice married Rose.

From the Same.—"Household Cookery," by Lizzie Heritage, with an Introduction by J. L. W. Thudichum, M.D., F.R.C.P. An indispensable book, containing nearly 4,000 recipes, with twenty-four half-tone reproductions from photographs and numerous other illustrations. There are chapters on The Management and Duties of Servants, Kitchen Utensils, Home-made Wines and Cordials, Pickles, Chutney, &c. A good and very complete index adds considerably to the value of the work. The printing and general get-up are good and the price most reasonable.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—"The Russian Bastille," by I. P. Youvatshev. Translated from the Russian by Dr. A. S. Rappoport. The author of this book was born in 1860. At the age of twenty-three he was arrested and taken to the fortress

HARRAP'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

Amongst the important additions to our List we would draw attention to two new volumes in the

Told Through the Ages Series

(21 vols.)

viz: "THE STORY OF ROLAND," and "STORIES FROM THUCYDIDES," each containing 256 pp., with 16 plates, 1s. 6d. each.

We have also commenced a new series

All Time Tales (12 vols.)

all of which are now ready. These volumes are printed in a large clear type, size 7½ by 5 ins., and each contains at least eight illustrations. Two titles are especially attractive, viz.: "Northland Heroes" and "A Book of Nature Myths." The price of the books bound in limp cloth is, 128 pp. 6d., and 160 pp. 9d. A Prize Edition with coloured frontispiece and special binding is issued at 1s. net.

Another very important Series is

Harrap's Shorter French Texts

(24 vols.)

All of which will be ready by July. The General Editor is Mr. J. E. MANSION, B.-ès-L., and each volume has been put into the hands of a specialist. They adopt the latest methods, and although each contains 64 pp. and is bound in limp cloth, the price is only 6d. each.

We are also issuing new books in

of St. Peter and St. Paul. He was guilty of nothing save the fact that he was acquainted with political criminals. He underwent a long term of solitary confinement in the living tombs of Schluesselburg. Many of his fellow-prisoners lost their reason, many others escaped the agony of suffering by courting death. Youvatshev himself was in constant dread of going mad. How he succeeded in keeping his mental balance he relates in the thrilling pages of this gloomy but valuable work. Later on he was transferred to Sakhalin, and in 1897 (fourteen years after his arrest) he was allowed to return to Russia, where he found his aged parents still alive. His descriptive writing is painstaking and minute, his memory accurate, his style detached, cool and convincing. We do not remember to have read before so close and minute an account of prison life which maintained so high a level of interest as this.

From The Christian Literature Society for India.—"The Madras Manual of Geography," by George Patterson. Intended for use in India, the Indian Empire being therefore treated with much greater fulness than any other country. It will be found to meet the requirements of every Indian University and to be suitable for use in every Province. The arrangement of the book is sensible and logical, the style simple and direct. The maps and illustrations are plentiful.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—"The Biography of a Silver Fox; or, Domino Reynard of Goldur Town," with over one hundred drawings by Ernest Thompson Seton. An extremely pretty tale; a delicately told story, not only interesting to the nursery, but to grown-ups. The ten full-page drawings are quite works of art, and would make a pretty series if framed and hung on the wall. Therefore, we would say, buy two copies, ornamenting the nursery with the pictures out of one of them of Silver Fox and his family, and keeping the other for reading to the delighted children. The pages of the "Silver Fox" were uncut—an unusual and regrettable circumstance.

From the Same.—"Radio Activity and Geology," by J. Joly, M.A., Sc.D., F.R.S. Professor Joly has re-written and made considerable additions to his Presidential Address to Section C of the Meeting of the British Association in Dublin last year; the result is now issued in book form in language less technical than the original address. There is a chapter on the part which Radio Activity may have played in the architecture of mountains, another on the age of the earth, and also a short discussion on the Radio Activity of the atmosphere. There is, of course, much in the book that is admittedly speculative; theories regarding the interior condition of the earth are naturally at present unprovable. Professor Joly presents in concise form all that is known on the subject dealt with. There are numerous diagrams and tables.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—"Calvin in His Letters," by Rev. Henry F. Henderson, M.A. Mr. Henderson claims that Calvin is seen at his best in his correspondence. "There we find ourselves brought into contact with one of the most remarkable personalities in history." In this little book he is studied in separate chapters as correspondent, man, theologian, pastor, reformer and friend. A penetrating and thoughtful volume.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—"Loves, Old and New," by Jean Middlemass. A murder mystery complicated by the usual unjust suspicions, missing papers and startling revelations. The mystery being solved, marriage bells begin to chime, and Irene Verschoyle regains the peace of mind that had been destroyed by her extraordinary interview with Mr. Dale and the subsequent discovery of the cold-blooded murder of her aunt. She meets Dale in a railway carriage; at the beginning of the journey he is dressed as a woman, but two hours later, when Irene opens her eyes after a long sleep, she discovers that the woman is really a man. Thus does the mystery begin, though its glamour is rather spoiled by almost incredible coincidences and rather weak character drawing.

From the Same.—"Children of Mammon," by John K. Leys. Ronald Macleod began life as clerk to Mr. Dunlop, a Glasgow man of business, who combined the shipping trade with company promoting. Ronald soon proved himself a canny Scot; but his success in Glasgow soon came to an abrupt termination, owing to the "shady" conduct of Mr. Dunlop over the East Borneo Mines; so he went to London, where he wrote articles and stories that no editor would accept. Starving proving a monotonous occupation, he gave up the literary life and, by a stroke of good luck, got into partnership with Arthur Buckland, a rather erratic but open-handed financial agent. Mr. Leys' vigorous story is mainly occupied with the commercial life of London, though there is also a strong love interest.

From the Same.—"The Shadow of Mayfair," by Robert Halifax. An intensely interesting tale, in which six notable characters, chiefly foreign Prime Ministers (one being our own Parliamentary Chief), are sentenced to death by an inner circle of Nihilists. Our Prime Minister's destruction is to be carried out by a celebrated artist, who has given up painting and become a Nihilist, driven to it by the harrowing scenes of poverty in London. So celebrated is he, that at the last sale of his pictures by auction they fetched £52,000. The Prime Minister's niece is in love with the artist-Nihilist. She, through her love for her uncle and by means of her love for the would-be assassin, is enabled to save the Prime Minister from his fate. In the end she sacrifices her life for her lover by disguising herself in his cloak and hat when she knew two of his fellow-Nihilists were waiting to kill him for not carrying out the order of the inner circle.

From the Same.—"Life's Wreckage," by Lady Wasteneys. A sensational story concerning a monthly nurse who takes to blackmailing, told in a style which will not commend itself to the fastidious. We suppose there must be a demand for this kind of novel, but it is strange that it should be so.

From the Same.—"The Disappearing Eye," by Fergus Hume. The eye is a glass one, on which is a cipher telling the hiding place of a large quantity of diamonds. The poor woman, wearing the eye, is murdered in order that the secret may be discovered. A most ingenious idea which nobody but Mr. Hume could have thought of. The clue to the murderer is not discovered until the end of the book, when justice is cheated by the murderer meeting with a frightful up-to-date death in an airship.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—"Yachting on the Pacific, together with Notes on Travel in Peru, and an Account of the Peoples and Products of Ecuador," by Alexander Mann. A pleasant book about a little-known part of the world. Mr. Mann is something of a philosopher and a keen student of human nature. Starting from Guayaquil in a motor schooner of 19 tons, built by himself, he sailed to the Galapagos Islands, distant from the mainland about six hundred miles. He writes also of inland journeys, and of the lovely city of Quito. Free Traders will find in him a champion worth quoting. The absence of a map is a serious blot on an otherwise highly satisfactory piece of work.

From the Same.—"Essays in Freedom," by Henry W. Nevinson. It is the fashion nowadays, when articles in newspapers and magazines are reprinted between the covers of a book, to declare that they ought to have been allowed to die in the paper that gave them birth. Such unkindness cannot justly be spoken of Mr. Nevinson's admirable essays with their distinct flavour and direct appeal. They are too short, we grant. The meal has a goodly number of courses, but the plate is never well filled; the appetite is whetted, but never satisfied. The papers cover all kinds of human life observed in countries lying between China and Peru, and they are full of colour, atmosphere, romance, adventure. "I was once present at the performance of one of Maxim Gorky's plays in a Moscow theatre"—so does one begin; another—"It was at a Berkshire fair one autumn Sunday." And so on—all personal, all straight from life or literature, and all containing something that is noble and chivalrous.

From Messrs. Everett & Co.—"The Lioness of Mayfair," by Anna, Comtesse de Bremont. It is difficult to find anything to say about this turgid and exaggerated book. Perhaps after all we may allow it the merit of novelty, for where have we before met the hero capable of seizing "the arm-chair and crushing it into splinters" to feed the dying embers of the heroine's hearth, especially after having the moment before mingled his "burning tears with the golden strands of her beautiful hair?" The first part of the story is related by the heroine, the sequel by the hero. We hardly know which is the more unreal to life.

From The Fabian Society.—The two new sixpenny booklets issued by the Fabian Society "donnent furieusement à penser." In "Socialism and National Minimum," Mrs. Sydney Webb and Miss Hutchins state the case of the factory and home worker and the necessity of the establishment of a legal minimum wage with reasonableness and force. A man need not be a Socialist in order to agree with much that is said on the subject. Dr. Johnston's "Wastage of Child Life" is a very remarkable contribution to a question which is of national importance. Whilst people are crying out at the falling birthrate, the glaring fact of infantile mortality cannot be ignored. Whilst the general death rate diminishes by leaps and bounds that of infants in 1906 reached the disgraceful figure of 132, as against 15.4, the adult rate. This gives a total of 123,859 "baby martyrs," as Dr. Johnston justly calls them—the large majority of deaths being absolutely preventable. His book is a masterpiece in brief, and we trust that it will be circulated far and wide.

From Mr. T. N. Foulis.—"The Complete Works of Friedrich Nietzsche." Vols. 1, 2, 3 and 5. "Thoughts Out of Season." Part 1, translated by Anthony M. Ludovici. Part 2, translated by Adrian Collins, M.A.——"The Birth of Tragedy." Translated by Wm. A. Haussmann, Ph.D.——"Beyond Good and Evil." Translated by Helen Zimmern. At last a British publisher has been sufficiently enterprising to give the public, at a very reasonable price and in a format at once dignified and attractive, an English translation of the complete works of Friedrich Nietzsche. The great German philosopher has for many years been referred to by name in the Press of this country, but more often than not in terms so vague that even now Nietzscheism has little definite meaning to the average well-educated man. Mr. Anthony M. Ludovici, Dr. Oscar Levy and Mr. A. R. Orage have each done something towards informing the public mind regarding Nietzsche's work by writing explanatory books upon it; now, however, every student can go straight to the fountain-head and drink freely of this rather intoxicating wine. The translations are admirable. No passages have been omitted, falsified or "sugared" in order to further the sales of the books; a version has been given of the originals that is nervous, forceful and scholarly. The two volumes of "Thoughts Out of Season" contain essays on David Strauss, Richard Wagner in Bayreuth, the Use and Abuse of History, and Schopenhauer as Educator. Volume 3 includes a fairly complete biography by the philosopher's sister, Elizabeth Forster-Nietzsche, and essays entitled "An Attempt at Self-Criticism," "Foreword to Richard Wagner" and "The Birth of Tragedy." Six further volumes are to be published shortly, and eight more during 1910. Mr. T. N. Foulis has earned our gratitude, for he has opened out a wide field of knowledge and speculation to all thoughtful men and women.

From the Same.—"Bird Life," by Charles Reid. Only those who have themselves attempted to photograph birds in their haunts and homes can adequately appreciate the difficulties that Mr. Reid has overcome in taking the hundred pictures of birds and their nests contained in this small volume. They rank among the best nature photographs we have seen. There is a picture on every page, and beneath each a few lines of explanatory text.

From Mr. A. Gardner (Paisley).—"Select Readings and Recitations," arranged by John Forsyth. A collection "at once crisp, modern, simple, and elevating" to use the words of the compiler, divided into four parts, the first of which consists of simple rules of elocution with exercises, &c. Many of the poems are by living authors, but there is a good sprinkling of old favourites. The last section contains items likely to please village audiences of grown-ups.

From Messrs. Gay & Hancock, Ltd.—"Barry Gordon," by William Farquhar Payson. The ancestors of Barry Gordon were a lusty, hard-living, adventurous lot; they fought in battle, drank deeply, and had all the big faults of their great virtues. Barry Gordon was summoned home from school to find his father dying. The primary cause of death was a nasty fall from his horse, but the old Colonel would not take to his bed; he sat up, drinking and smoking, until the end came. Barry inherited the uncontrollable tempera-

"We have tried to make our book highly practical, both by the description of important experiments and, especially, by making a collection, at the end of each chapter, of experiments which are not only feasible, but also help to explain the text.

Another feature for which we claim a certain amount of novelty is the introduction of a chapter on the metals, in which is summed up very shortly an account of their extraction and the preparation of their salts. As a beginner's practical work generally consists in the preparation of many of the simple salts of the metals, it seems only right that a chapter should be devoted to them even in an elementary book."

ment of his forefathers; he also had their love for strong drink, and this craving was indulged as a consolation for his expulsion from college and for his bad luck in love. Wanderings and adventures in Europe helped him to find himself, and his end was peace. The Americanisms are just a little alarming. What, for instance, does this mean? "He had seen a grind, just flunked, cross the campus crushed."

From Messrs. Gill & Son (Dublin).—"Poems," by Eva, of The Nation. An incomplete collection of this writer's poems was issued in America in 1877, the present edition, which is edited by Seumas MacManus, contains all her best work. Mr. Justin M'Carthy contributes a biographical sketch which greatly adds to the interest of the volume. "Eva" will always be remembered in connection with the Irish National movement, and no one can peruse this receuil without realising that the Celtic spirit finds its true expression in her wild and melancholy songs.

From Mr. Henry J. Glaisher.—"Songs of England Awaking," by George Barlow. Some momentous questions of our time have occasioned the publication of this brochure from the pen of a poet. Mr. Barlow has the courage of his convictions in his chosen subjects, and conveys them in forceful and rhythmical language.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—"In the Shadow of the Peaks," by Stata B. Couch. Mrs. Couch has laid her story amid scenes unfamiliar to the reader of English fiction. The Valley of Cuernavaca, Mexico, full of ancient memories and modern romance, makes a very appropriate setting for this tale of adventure. Hazel Cowley, a visitor to Mexico, is abducted by Aville Bonilla, an impetuous Mexican of the highest culture. Hazel's adventures supply most of the interest of the book, which is well-written and full of incident and clever character drawing.

From the Same.—"Royal Lovers and Mistresses," The Romance of Crowned and Uncrowned Kings and Queens of Europe, by Angelo S. Rappoport, Ph.D. A very fine work of over 300 pages with illustrations of the royal beauties. The old saying that "a King can do no wrong" is evident when we read these pages and learn how often the Queen (legally married) and the courtesan can live under the same roof for many years, and the "proper ruling of the nation" continue.

From the Same.—"Delusion," by Joseph Prague. A remarkable story of a man who suddenly, by the death of a relative, found himself wealthy. His good fortune is nearly too much for him, but he is saved by the good offices of an honest lawyer, whose daughter he marries. The book is clever, and shows the author's knowledge of character and power of describing it.

From the Same.—"A Son of Desolation," by M. Y. Halidom. The son of desolation was born when an earthquake was ruining Malaga; his mother died in giving him birth, and his father refused to acknowledge the illegitimate child. Twenty years later, when living as Fernando Suarez, he rescued his father and his father's daughter, Dolores, from certain death; as a reward he was raised from the ranks to be an officer in the army. The machinations of a Jesuit threw suspicion upon him, and he was regarded by many as a thief. This was but the prelude to a strange, tumultuous and tormented career, which ended in a tragic death. The tale is well told and is full of incident. The writer's English is occasionally not of the best. On the first page, for instance, we are told that "the heat . . . became so close and hot."

From the Same.—"From Land's End to the Lizard," by A. G. Folliott Stokes. Illustrated by J. C. Douglas, Alex. Begbie and E. Lane. This book contains an exceedingly pretty account of Cornwall, with many excellent illustrations, and at the end of the book there is a short glossary of Cornish words and a map. Anybody thinking of taking a holiday in Cornwall would do well to purchase "From Land's End to the Lizard."

From The Gresham Publishing Co.—"The Standard Cyclopedia of Modern Agriculture and Rural Economy." Edited by Professor R. Patrick Wright, F.H.A.S., F.R.S.E. Vol. 4, Coc-Duc. As each separate volume of this wholly admirable publication reaches us we are increasingly amazed at the thoroughness of its compilation, the brilliance of its writing and the exactness of its information. It is, indeed, "The Standard" cyclopedia on the subject of agriculture. The new volume is amply supplied with excellent illustrations, some of which are coloured. Among the more important articles we may mention the following:—"Dairy Bacteriology," by D. Houston, B.Sc.; "Cultivation," by Dr. Edward J. Russell; "Cotton," by Sir George Watt, M.B.; "Compensation for Unexhausted Improvements," by J. Augustus Voelcker, Ph.D., M.A. Other contributors are Lord Arthur Cecil, Professor Patrick Wright, Mr. James Long, Professor J. Arthur Thomson and Professor Edward Blundell.

From Messrs. C. Griffin & Co.—"The Year-Book of the Scientific and Learned Societies of Great Britain and Ireland, 1907–8." This is the twenty-fifth appearance of this useful annual. Classified under broad subjects such as Chemistry and Photography, Naval and Military Science, Law, Literature and History, and provided with an alphabetical index to societies, it is easy to consult. Every society of importance seems to be included, and the information given includes officers, meetings, conditions of membership, publications, and papers read during the past session. We have tested it in the subjects with which we are most familiar, and the result is most satisfactory. We still think it a pity that no means of reference to the many valuable papers read before various societies is available, and again suggest that an index to these included in this annual or issued as a separate publication would be of immense service.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—"A Nice Pair," by Henry J. Barker. A series of sketches of country characters, humorous for the most part. The yarns are told by an old village crony who is steeped in the gossip and lore of his native place, so there is no attempt at literary effect, and every page is natural and unforced. The book is of the kind to have handy after dinner when one passes a half-hour with a pipe or cigar.

From the Same.—"Katrine," by Elinor Macartney Lane. Frank Ravenel, the hero of this Irish-American story, has a harder fight to obtain the good opinion of his reader critics than one so aristocratic and debonnair ought to have. Pride of race drives him away from Katrine—not before, but after her heart is broken by his conduct. Resolving to mend the past by seeking her out and wedding her forthwith, he dawdles about for some years before making any practical attempt to put his resolution into effect. Katrine, meanwhile, has achieved fame as a singer, and when she does encounter her former lover she not unnaturally shares the reader's suspicion that the change in her social position has something to do with his belated offer of marriage. However, Ravenel is whitewashed before the end and all turns out happily.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—"The Cage," by Harold Begbie. "It may be compared to a cage: the birds without despair to get in, and those within despair to get out." These words of Montaigne serve as a motto to Mr. Begbie's rather disconnected story on the marriage question. The story is not a good one; the central situation is presented with some unnecessary circumlocution, and the rest of the book consists chiefly of abortive discussions on marriage. Mr. Begbie is seriously interested in the religious, ethical and sociological aspects of his subject, but he does not appear to us to have got to the bottom of it.

From Messrs. Hunter & Longhurst.—"A Piece of New Cloth," by James Adderley. A church tale of the twentieth century, in which the religious, social and political views of "advanced" thinkers to-day are made to clash with the views of yesterday.

JAMES BROWN & SON, Boy Scout Publishers, GLASGOW

John Seymour, the young and enthusiastic son of old and conventional parents, is drawn with sympathy and insight, and the salt of humour freshens the style and quickens the interest of this thoughtful and suggestive story.

From the Same.—"The Story of Glastonbury and the Grail, or the Light of Avalon," by Melchoir MacBride. The dramatic sequence of events connected with the legendary foundation of this venerated fane of a semi-barbaric age is the main theme of this well constructed "Mystery Play." The author has skilfully woven into his metrical story the lofty episode of the "Holy Grail," so prominent in Arthurian romance. An "introductory" and other helpful notes are appended to this scholarly volume.

From Mes rs Jordan & Sons, Ltd.—"The Law affecting Dogs and Their Owners," by William Marshall Freeman, Barrister-at Law. This book should be the standard work when the law has to be set in motion with regard to injury to a dog, &c. It is clearly and plainly written, and every dog-owner would do well to possess a copy, especially if he is accustomed to exhibit dogs at shows and has, of course, to send them by rail.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—"The Policy of Licensing Justices," by Edwin A. Pratt. Treating of the question why Licensing Justices should not uphold public-houses. That official statistics recently published show there is no connection between the number of them and the prosecutions for drunkenness. That the public-houses should be treated as the rich man's club is treated. This book records how a licence was put back by the Justices because the licencee had been fined for riding his bicycle on the footpath! Again that a publican finding his rooms outside a large Midland town were getting overcrowded during the warm weather, put some tables and chairs in his garden, and allowed his customers to take their liquor in the open air; but being speedily warned through the police that, unless he discontinued the practice, he would run the risk of losing his licence he reverted to the old plan, and compelled his customers to push into the overcrowded, hot, and stuffy rooms. They could have purchased the liquor and carried it into the garden, but the landlord must not serve them with it there. Thus the welfare of the State is supposed to be safeguarded instead of the people being allowed to enjoy themselves rationally as they do in France, Spain, &c.

From the Same.—"Insurance Against Unemployment," by David Schloss. A valuable contribution to the study of unemployment. No attempt is made to discuss whether it is desirable or practicable to introduce insurance into this country, but the book contains a concise account of what has been done on these lines abroad, with details as to legislation and a useful bibliography. In short it provides materials upon which to base a judgment.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—"Stories from the Greek Legends," by C. Gasquoine Hartley (Mrs. C. G. Gallichan). Mrs. Gallichan has shown no little literary ability and tact in telling once more the more human and popular of the Greek legends. An introductory chapter introduces the reader to the names and characteristics of the various gods and goddesses, and then follow twenty-one stories related with force, dignity, and a great degree of beauty. Young and old alike will take pleasure in this attractive volume with its appropriate illustrations.

From the Same.—"The King and Isabel," by the author of "The Adventures of John Johns." The King of Astia and his cousin, the Duke of Varlemon, are both in love with Lady Isabel Strange—a beautiful and clever widow. But the King is already married, and the Duke is commanded by his aunt to contract a dynastic marriage with an ugly lady with a dowry of a hundred thousand pounds. Matters are further complicated by a Socialist playwright, Arthur Vincent, who is an illegitimate child of the King of Astia's uncle and therefore cousin both to the King and to the Duke. He, in his turn, loves Isabel—and, indeed, there are other lovers besides. The story is rather long drawn out, but the dialogue is bright and clever. On the last page the King drives off in a motor at the command of Isabel, and there is little doubt that in the end she married Dr. Murray.

From the Same.—"The Modern Mother," by H. Laing Gordon, M.D. This work directs the attention of the mother to the rational means of preparing the body for its functions and of maintaining health during and after their performance. The means by which illness may be prevented are carefully pointed out. Minor complaints are described and treatment suggested only up to the point when professional advice is necessary, which is clearly indicated in each case. Serious illness, wisely enough, is not described. The period of girlhood is dwelt upon somewhat fully with a view to showing its influence upon womanhood, and reference is made to the subject of education. An ex-hospital ward sister has revised the section on Infancy.

From Mr. John Long.—"The Jockey's Revenge," by Nat Gould. A very good story with the plot of the revenge well worked out. Curiously, in conversation neither the trainer nor the jockey of Sir Oscar Ascham refer to him as Sir Oscar or even as Sir (see pages 87 and 188), as is usual in this country. Mr. Nat Gould's last novel is well up to the mark and affords enjoyable reading.

From Messrs. Luzac & Co.—"Four Methods of Teaching English to Maswina," by E. Biehler, S.J. Father Biehler is a missioner stationed at Chishawasha, South Africa, and he has devoted some of his time and scholarship to the compilation of this book with a view to helping Maswina children to learn English. So far as we can judge, the book is admirably arranged, and should fulfil its purpose excellently. The principles on which Father Biehler has based the various Chiswina sounds will be found in "English-Chiswina Dictionary, with an Outline Chiswina Grammar," by the same author. A great amount of learning and patience must have gone to the preparation of this book. Father Biehler has also published "Testamente," a translation of Dr. Knecht's Child's Bible History intended for use by Maswina school children. Some excellent illustrations will help children to understand the text.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—"Gervase," by Mabel Dearmer. Some folk are truly to be pitied, especially those who have doubts on religion and who are always thinking on the subject. This is the case with the principal character in the book, and then, poor fellow, he marries a lady who tells him on the wedding night that she only married him to give the child—to be born in six months' time—a name. He does not divorce her, and she, living away from him, dies in childbirth, and the child is stillborn. The hero becomes a Member of Parliament, and wants to marry his wife's sister, and the book ends in a scene at the House of Commons, when the second reading of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill is carried by a large majority.

From the Same.—"Pif Paf," by Edouard de Laboulaye.——"Le Col d'Anterne," by Rodolphe Töpffer.——"Les Deux Frères," by Alexandre Dumas.——"David le Trappeur," by Emile Souvestre.——"Yvon et Finette," by Edouard de Laboulaye.—"Les Aventures du Dernier Abencerage," by Chateaubriand.——"Le Chien Volant," by Madame de Girardin.——"La Chasse au Lion," by Jules Gérard.——"Les Jeunes Parisiens," by Lucie Pezet.——"Les Prisonniers du Caucase," by Xavier de Maistre.——"Contes de Fées," by Charles Perrault. These handy little volumes are all included in Siepmann's French Series for Rapid Reading. The editors, Messrs. Otto Siepmann and Eugène Pellissier, believe that students of French should, whenever possible, have two books on hand for study—one to be studied carefully, and the other to be read cursorily. In the vocabularies added to each book will be found, in addition to the more difficult words and phrases, several sentences illustrating grammatical points. The notes are confined to the elucidation of points bearing on the subject matter found in the texts.

From the Same.—"A Roman Singer," by F. Marion Crawford. It is needless to review this beautiful story by the author whose death we all regret, for it is one many of us know and like, and at 7d. in cloth it will find a far wider circle of friends.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—"The Parson of Burgate," by Caroline Walling. A book of "prithee" and "mayhap," the story laid in the years 1638–1660; and that the authoress takes herself seriously may be judged from the fact that explanatory notes are provided in an Appendix. The religious struggles of these momentous years form the theme round which revolves an interesting story in which people with such delightful names as Dame Aloysia, Petronilla and Tamsin play a part.

From the Same.—"This is My Story," by A Missionary. The author of this booklet began to take an interest in spiritual matters when an Undergraduate at Cambridge; he entered the Church, but had religious difficulties which were only solved twenty-five years later. His story is not one of outward events, but of inner feelings and aspirations.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—"Artemision, Idylls and Songs," by Maurice Hewlett. The influence of Wordsworth, and especially of Keats, has evidently contributed something to the noble style in which the three happily inspired idylls, founded upon Greek myths, have been written. These, and the minor poems that make up this choice volume, fully sustain the reputation of Mr. Hewlett as a master of Hellenic romance and scholarly verse.

From the Same.—"A Few Lyrics," by Laurence Alma Tadema. Although this new book from a gifted poetess consists of only short pieces, it is full of poetry and fancy. Its refinement of thought and of form will surely extend the appreciation of a writer whose work is undoubtedly sincere.

From the Same.—"Vanderdecken, and other Pieces," by Gilbert Hudson. The initial poem in this brochure (forming a fresh contribution to the "Vigo Cabinet Series") is a good metrical version of the familiar Dutch legend. A virile dramatic interlude between "Cromwell and Noble," brings to a fitting close this little book of genuine poetry.

From the Same.—Those who do not disdain the lays of the Minor Poet should make a point of getting the two little volumes just issued in "The Vigo Cabinet Series" by Mr. Elkin Mathews, "River Music, and other Poems," by W. R. Titterton and "The Philanthropists," by Ruth Young. Both maintain a high level and show insight and a love of nature, Mr. Titterton being especially happy in those poems relating to the sea.

From Messrs. Mills and Boon, Ltd.—"Votes for Women: a Play in Three Acts," by Elizabeth Robins. This brilliant, amusing and moving play was produced last year at the Court Theatre. Many of those who had no opportunity of witnessing it on the stage will be glad to read it in book form.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.—"The Finding of Mercia," by Cassius Minor. With Introduction by H. N. Robbins. Cassius Minor, we suspect, is one and the same person as H. N. Robbins, for they both write in the same style. Mercia is a country somewhere overseas where a quaint kind of English is spoken, and where Socialism reigns. The manners, customs, government and language of this strange people are fully described in a style that is rather cramped and artificial.

From the Same.—"The Story of the Jewish People," by Jack M. Myers. Vol. I. This history of the Jewish people since Bible times has been prepared for use in both school and home; while simple in style and appropriate for the use of young people between the ages of eleven and seventeen, it can also be read with profit and interest by elder persons. The first volume begins with the Maccabean revolt; the introductory chapter gives a bird's-eye view of the events leading up to the opening chapter. The picture of life in Jerusalem at the time of Herod, and the Stories of the Rabbis, occupy nearly two-thirds of the first volume; all the sayings, anecdotes, &c., included in this section have been taken from Talmudic, Midrashic or Biblical sources.

From Messrs. Stanley Paul & Co.—"In Calvert's Valley," by Margaret Prescott Montague. An exceedingly pretty tale of American life, with some passages really beautifully written, and with most refined sentiments. The story revolves on the death of James Calvert, who is pushed over a cliff to his destruction by an idiot. The mother who witnessed the deed, states that it was done by a Mr. Page Emylyn. He was drunk, and could not refute the charge, but when on trial for murder the mother of the idiot, who had died in the meantime, confesses that it was her son who pushed Mr. Calvert over the cliff for "he liked to hear things splash in the crick below."

From the Same.—"The Burden of 1909," by Eldon Lee. This rather startling booklet is in the nature of a prophecy. A neurotic boy is hypnotised by his sister, and is asked what is "to happen in the year so soon to dawn." The reply is disconnected and spasmodic, but the reader gathers that for a time the forces of evil are to prevail, that women are to endure much suffering, and that new power will be given "to the methods of blood and pain." Well, we shall see.

From Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.—"Body and Soul," by Percy Dearmer, M.A. Mr. Dearmer declares that "a religion that ignores the physical effects of the Spirit—health, that is to say—and the spiritual element in healing, is clearly not commensurate with the Christianity of Christ." He has therefore been at considerable pains to prepare this enquiry into the effects of religion upon health, and much of his book is new and rather startling. There are also frequent references to and descriptions of Christian works of healing from the New Testament to the present day. An appendix contains accounts of what claim to be wonderful cures of bodily illness and distress.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—"Memory Harbour," by Filson Young. Mr. Young has an unusual gift for close and vivid description of places and events. In his latest book he has painted word-pictures of different spots in the world that he has visited, and each of his pictures glows with bright yet soft colours that are very pleasing to the eye. He was a war correspondent in the South African War, and was at the Modder River camp and Paardeberg; he has passed pleasant days at Monte Carlo, lived a year in Cornwall, dreamed away some weeks in Ireland; he understands London, loves railways, and has been fascinated by Portland Gaol. It is impossible for Mr. Young to tire or bore; his picturesque personality is always interesting, for he combines the sanity of the close thinker with the romance of the poet.

From Messrs. S nds & Co.—"The Story of Felicity," by Mina Doyle. The authoress is to be congratulated on having written a charming story dealing with matters of every-day life in a clever way. We admire much the cover of the book, its colour and the portrait of Felicity.

From Messrs. Sidgwick & Jackson, Ltd.—"Land Values Taxation," by C. H. Chomley and R. L. Outhwaite. The writers of this book acknowledge their indebtedness to Henry George; like that popular and forcible writer, they regard Land Values Taxation as "The essential reform," and believe it to be the fundamental remedy for social injustice. They explain the subject both from its theoretical and practical aspect, and show how the principle can be most beneficially applied to present-day needs in the United Kingdom.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—"Davina," by Frances G. Burmester. A strong, detailed and leisurely story of the present day—a novel of character rather than of incident. Joe Lawson accidentally deprives Bertha Gillespie of the hearing of one of her ears; he strikes her on the head at a hockey-match. The other ear is also threatened, and as he has money and she has not, and all kinds of expenses are likely to be incurred if she is to save even part of her hearing, he offers money to her guardian. It is indignantly refused. The act of fine self-sacrifice which follows turns out to be a mockery, and trying situations are brought about which serve to reveal and illustrate the chief characters of the story.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—"German The Viking, a Story of Ancient England," by James Stuart. A pretty little tale of the time of battle-axes and armour. Many a "war-like" youth of the present would enjoy reading it, and we can thoroughly recommend this inspiriting story.

From Mr. Edward Stanford.—"A Sketch of Historical Geography," by Keith Johnston, F.R.G.S. There is a history of geography just as there is a geography of history; indeed, the studies of history and geography are inseparable. The present volume is a history of the spread of knowledge of this globe from B.C. 1000 to A.D. 1908. The known world B.C. 450 was bounded by the South of Ireland, the North Coast of Africa, Arabia and the Caspian Sea. Since then almost every habitable portion of the globe has been explored, described and mapped. The history of the growth of geographical knowledge is one long romance, and the record written by Mr. Keith Johnston is not only serviceable and accurate, but of deep interest and permanent value.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—"Somes House," by Alfred Mansfield Brooks. Unfortunately, Mr. Brooks has not mastered even the elements of the art of story telling; his digressions are frequent and unnecessary, and his action is constantly interrupted by rather tiresome reflections and observations. He has some skill in character-drawing, and Eliza Somes is natural and life-like. The tale is old fashioned in tone and atmosphere, but is none the worse on that account.

From Messrs. A. Treherne & Co., Ltd.—"John Cave," by W. B. Trites. John Cave is a pressman—a reporter on various American dailies. He is a man of some refinement, but his character is essentially weak; he works by fits and starts, and the monotony of his existence is punctuated at irregular intervals by bouts of drunkenness. His career is no great matter, but what holds the reader is Mr. Trites's vigorous and straightforward pictures of journalistic life in the States. If his account is accurate and unprejudiced, then the average American newspaper is much worse than we had imagined. It is ruthless, vulgar beyond conception, and utterly contemptuous of the decencies of social life. The book is clever and a little brutal, though it savours more of graphic reporting than of fiction, it is nevertheless very readable and of some real value.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—"The Slave Girl of Agra": an Indian Historical Romance. A story of Indian life commencing in the year 1590, before the English were in power. An interesting tale for Anglo-Indians to read, but hardly suitable to those who know not India. A cleverly written book, the interest in the different characters is maintained to the end.

From the Same.—"Henry in Search of a Wife," by Alphonso Courtlander. A pretty tale, telling of the trials of a bachelor, who said he did not want to marry, but had to in the end, and in a curious way, as the author shows.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—"Man and the Bible: a Review of the Place of the Bible in Human History," by J. Allanson Picton, M.A. A work to which many would apply the term of "destructive criticism," and a smaller number that of "constructive criticism." It contains much of both, being an examination as to "whether the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures are really a miraculous and isolated revelation; and if not, what is the place they occupy among other literatures and traditions that have influenced the moral progress of mankind." The author, whilst holding that the Bible is "a most precious record of our main line of religious evolution," demands an entire abandonment of supernatural claims and believes this will not lessen but confirm its influence. We are to take the Bible simply, disembarrassing it from impossible doctrines. The vastness of the ground covered by the book may be judged from the fact that it ranges from the Bible in the days of Primitive Christianity through the Middle Ages down to our own times. There is some hard hitting upon the subject of Social Reform. The book is altogether a powerful and rather ruthless work, undeniably effective, and perhaps not a little saddening.

From the Same.—"The Mineral Kingdom," by Professor Brauns. Translated by L. T. Spencer. Part 6 of this work is quite up to the high standard of excellence reached by the preceding parts. It deals with the ores of two of the most important metals, viz., Zinc and Lead, and also those of the pseudo-metallic substance Arsenic. The output of metal by the several countries is also shown. It is illustrated by some fine coloured plates of the various minerals containing the above-mentioned metals.

From Messrs. Yellon, Williams & Co., Ltd.—"Love and Parentage," by William Platt. A plea for more sincerity and reverence in dealing with sex questions. Neo-Malthusianism is heartily attacked, and free love is severely trounced. The book is intended for parents. We advise booksellers not to urge its sale indiscriminately. "The Esoteric Teaching of the Gnostics," by Frances Swiney. The four extraordinary coloured illustrations given in this work are "spirit" drawings—that is to say, they were done by a controlling spirit through the medium of a lady in a trance. This lady, we are told, had no knowledge of colour-symbology, and yet the pictures as they stand are full of significance when properly explained. The lecture they illustrate is thoughtful and well written.

New Editions, &c.—Messrs. G. Routledge & Sons, Ltd. send us two further volumes in Mr. K. Harvey's well-arranged series of Shakespeare's plays for "Home Reading," viz., "As You Like It," and "Hamlet." Mr. Robe t Culley's Finsbury Library, edited by the Rev. John Telford, B.A., will when completed cover a wide field of popular and entertaining literature, including books of history, travel, adventure, poetry, missionary enterprise and social subjects. The three volumes we have received: "John Wesley's Journal" (abridged), "Four Thousand Miles Across Siberia," by Charles Wenyon, M.D., and "The Great Chinese Awakening," by A. R. Kelley—are strongly bound in attractive cloth covers, and the paper and type are of good quality. A popular shilling edition of "The New Theology," by the Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A., will no doubt prove welcome. It is issued by Messrs. Mills & Boon, Ltd. Mr. Henry Frowde sends us a booklet containing Morning and Evening Prayer, continuously arranged, with Litany, Psalms, Collects and Holy Communion.

Reviews.—We have received a copy of the first number of The Open Review, which is a new sixpenny monthly dealing with Finance, Business, and Politics. It attacks the present "restricted and antiquated currency and banking laws," and contends for a thorough revision of our financial system.

Hooper and Jackson Fighting Each Other

According to the New York Times of Friday, May 28th, as the result of a disagreement between Walter M. Jackson, of Newton, Mass., and Horace E. Hooper, who for many years have been associated in the publication and sale of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," Mr. Jackson has filed a bill in Chancery asking that a receiver be appointed to take charge of their joint assets, and that an injunction issue, restraining Mr. Hooper and his associates from consummating an alleged plan to oust Mr. Jackson from the business. The complainant further seeks to have the partnership dissolved and an accounting rendered by the defendants.

In answer to the bill, the defendants were ordered at Trenton, on May 27th, to show cause why an injunction should not issue in accordance with the prayer. The order also restrains the defendants temporarily from assigning or disposing of any stock in the company of Hooper & Jackson, Ltd. It further restrains any disposition being made of the English or American rights in the eleventh edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica.

The bill of complaint filed by Lindabury, Depue & Faulks gives some inside history regarding the business management of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and a plan of its prospectus for the purchase of the London Times, which was interested in the enterprise. It shows that for years Mr. Jackson and Mr. Hooper, under a joint partnership, controlled absolutely the affairs of the various corporations which were organised to circulate the Encyclopædia.

Beginning of the Business

Prior to 1900 Mr. Jackson and Mr. Hooper had been associated with James Clarke and George Clarke in the publication and sale of subscription books. The principal office was in London, and the business was carried on under the name of the Clarke Company, Limited. Some time in March of that year Hooper and Jackson decided to become more closely associated in the ownership and control of the business, and in furtherance of their plan acquired the Clarke interests.

The "Encyclopædia Britannica" and the Grolier Society

From 1900 until about last November the partners conducted their various joint enterprises resulting from their partnership in different countries under various names, and according to the means and methods which the business in the respective localities seemed to demand During the period from 1900 to 1902 they acquired their most important assets, namely, the copyrights and trade name of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." All books which they published were offered to the public in the name either of the London Times, the London Standard, or of some other newspaper, or in the name of the Grolier Society of London, a trade name adopted by the partners.

In 1902, owing to the provisions of the English law putting a tax on the business, the affairs of the Clarke Company, Limited, were liquidated, and English and American companies were formed to take over the business. The English company was known as Hooper & Jackson, Limited, and the American corporation as the Encyclopædia Britannica Company, a New York corporation. The partners drew from the business of the Clarke Company, Limited, $100,000 for operating expenses of Hooper & Jackson, Limited, and the remaining assets were conveyed to the New York company for the issuing of its $500,000 worth of capital stock and $1,000,000 in bonds.

The 11th Edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" due January 1, next.

In January, 1908, the public announcement of a proposed change in the control of The Times was regarded by Hooper and Jackson as likely to impair the value of a contract they had for the publication of the eleventh edition of the Encyclopædia, to be brought out on January 1st next. At that time it is claimed that about half a million dollars had already been expended under the contract. Mr. Hooper and Mr. Jackson thereupon entered into negotiations, looking either to the purchase of the London Times by them, or its control by those whose management of the property would not impair the value of their existing contract.

H. and J. said to have Split over the Sale of The Times and the "Encyclopædia Britannica"

The bill states that services in connection with the sale of the newspaper were given by Mr. Hooper and Mr. Jackson, as a result of which it was purchased in March, 1908, by a company organised through the negotiations of the partners.

The break between Mr. Hooper and Mr. Jackson, according to the bill, was about last July, when they had a disagreement as to the general policy to be pursued in relation to their joint undertakings. Mr. Hooper desired to organise a large corporation to acquire The Times and amalgamate it with their business and sell certain of its securities to the public. To this Mr. Jackson objected as a scheme hazardous, and likely to result in a loss. Mr. Hooper then proposed to raise $1,500,000 upon their joint assets, to be used in bringing out the eleventh edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" on an elaborate scale, with great expenditures for advertising in practically all parts of the world simultaneously. To this scheme Mr. Jackson would not give his assent. Mr. Hooper thereupon proposed liquidation of their joint concerns, and asked Mr. Jackson to act as liquidator in the sale of their assets. In a letter to Mr. Jackson he stated that he was willing to close up his whole business and expressed the belief that Mr. Jackson should assume entire responsibility for two or three years in order that Mr. Hooper might have a needed rest.

Mr. Jackson says he consented to this plan, and last October negotiations were pending, with the approval of Mr.

Hooper, for the sale of the going business as a whole. The partners met in New York in November, when Mr. Hooper proposed that Mr. Jackson should purchase his interest in the business for $2,000,000. Mr. Jackson declined this offer, and Mr. Hooper then proposed that he (Hooper) should be given sole charge, and have a large salary for his services. Mr. Jackson also declined to concur in this proposition, and it looks as though the Law Courts will have to arrange matters.

The Sevenpenny Novel in Cloth.

The Bookseller charged THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR with mistake and misrepresentation—charges which were easily refuted. In a more recent issue it misrepresents what we said entirely by not giving the context. The Bookseller says: "The question of the unregulated publication of the sevenpenny copyright novel, so far from being (as our contemporary, The Publishers' Circular, asserts) 'comparatively trivial,' is really a question of the continuance or the extinction of the six shilling novel—at any rate, as published at present."

Here is the sentence from which The Bookseller takes the words it attempts to refute:—

> "What we are positive about is that if the policy advocated by our esteemed contemporary, The Bookseller, viz., that certain firms should leave the Association because they wished to publish their books in their own way and at their own time, we say if that policy had been carried out officially by the Association it would have broken it up—and that would have been a disaster to the book trade far greater than anything this comparatively trivial sevenpenny question can inflict on it."

Any unprejudiced reader will see that we did not say the sevenpenny question was comparatively trivial, but that any damage it could cause would be a disaster which, compared with the break up of the Publishers' Association, would be trivial. We think our contemporary, in justice to its readers and the P.C., should put this matter right.

We are glad to see that our contemporary is coming round to our view—viz., that this question affects not only publishers, but also authors and booksellers. We regret that it still advocates that the Publishers' Association should add to its rules one enabling it to expel a minority which did not submit to its ruling as to when, how and at what price they shall publish their books. To be consistent, our contemporary should suggest another rule—viz., that members who submit in the way it suggests are to be compensated for all loss incurred through the interference of the Association in their private business arrangements. The publishers of fiction having been coerced as suggested, what is to prevent the rule being applied to other classes of publishers whose methods of publishing by subscription or canvassing, &c., may not be approved by the "whole trade"?

There would very soon be other "recalcitrant" minorities to be expelled. This would manifestly break up the Association, and the net book system also, for there would be nobody to enforce its rules.

The Publishers' Association would never have had a beginning, even, if there had been any question of expulsion of members who would not publish in the form, time and at the price it chose to dictate. It will very soon have an ending if our contemporary's policy is adopted. It is a policy of compulsion, or expulsion, and no publishers with any self-respect would care to belong to such a tyrannical Trade Union as that contemplates.

The Banquet of the Associated Booksellers

Notes and Announcements

IN France market gardens are said to be a great deal more successful than here: the reason why is told in a book which Mr. Murray is shortly publishing, "French Market Gardening," by Mr. John Weathers, who has had considerable practical experience both as a gardener and as a writer.

Mr. John Lane will publish shortly "A Vision of Life," by Darrell Figgis, with an Introduction by G. K. Chesterton.

Dr. David Forsyth's forthcoming work on "Children in Health and Disease" will be published by Mr. Murray during June. It is a book which parents, physicians, educationalists and public authorities should find of very considerable value, for it makes a most complete study of the physiological and psychological characteristics of the child, and treats authoritatively of such subjects as the hygiene of schools, the training of children, infant mortality, and the treatment of sick children. The work, indeed, discusses exhaustively the most intricate and important question of the day; for with neglected and unhealthy children how can there be strong national life and a worthy future for the Empire? With our National birth-rate declining, to save the children which are born and make them healthy, is the most important thing of all.

The Countess of Carlisle, Lady Mary Murray, Miss Weston (Founder of the Seaman's Home), Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, F.M. Earl Roberts, the Bishop of St. Albans, &c., are already in the long list of distinguished subscribers to Miss Ida Turner's new book "The Reprobate, Stephen Gower," dedicated by permission to Lady Henry Somerset, and shortly to be published by Elliot Stock.

On June 15th Mr. John Lane will publish a new edition of "Grieg and his Music," by H. T. Finck, with illustrations, and valuable new material; "The Making of Species," by Douglas Dewar and Frank Finn; "Laurus Nobilis: Essays on Art and Life," by Vernon Lee.

Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. will publish within the next few days a new edition of "Voice Building and Tone Placing," by H. Holbrook Curtis. In this work the author, who is the well-known specialist, has shown a new method for the relief of injured vocal cords by some very simple tone exercises. In his introduction the author expresses his indebtedness to Madame Melba for her generous assistance in the chapter on Voice Building.

Mr. H. de Vere Stacpoole's new novel, "The Pools of Silence" will be published on June 14th by Mr. Unwin. With "The Pools of Silence" Mr. Stacpoole completes a triology of remarkable books dealing with the Tropics and the East. "The Crimson Azaleas" was the first of these books, "The Blue Lagoon" was the second, and "The Pools of Silence," more extraordinary than either, completes the series. The vivid suns, the torrential rains of tropical Africa, the vast and merciless Fate that holds the people of the Congo forests in the hollow of her great green hand, the forests themselves roaring to the rains or fuming in the sun, are presented with almost blinding vividness. Mr. Stacpoole, who has brought Japan and Polynesia to Europe with a poetical truth unexampled by any other writer except Pierre Loti, presents Central Africa in the same way, lifting the curtain on a natural and social drama, a tragedy filled with beauty yet tinged with terror.

PUBLISHERS' REPRESENTATIVES

No. IV

MR. J. M. EDKINS

[Town Representative of three London Publishers]

[By P.C. Special]

MR. J. M. EDKINS, the G.O.M. of "The Road" was born in Bristol on May 22nd, 1835. His 74 years weigh but lightly upon him, and although he is always busy he managed to spare a few minutes to chat, not about himself and what he has done, but about other people, for Mr. Edkins, of all men, is most unassuming and modest. Mr. Edkins has spent all his life in the midst of books, being apprenticed at the age of 14½ to John Burbidge, the artist, of Regent's Place, Clifton, who carried on the business of bookseller, stationer, and artists' colourman. Burbidge also had a library and reading room, and one day in 1851 or 1852 a man entered the shop and said he wished to subscribe for a month to the library and reading room; judge of Mr. Edkins' surprise when the customer proceeded to write "Thos. Babington Macaulay" on the register. Macaulay afterwards subscribed for three months. Another notable man of letters was Dickens, who accepted an invitation to visit the library, and Mr. Edkins was brought into personal touch with him.

Mr. Burbidge in 1852 started the Clifton Chronicle, a paper which is in a flourishing condition to-day, and he also brought out a Handbook to Bristol Cathedral. Mr. Edkins says that about this time the question of 3d. discount in the 1s. cropped up and was brought prominently before him by a customer who refused to purchase books at Mr. Burbidge's unless a discount were allowed. This customer said another bookseller, a Mr. Kerslake, allowed a discount, and the latter, when asked by Mr. Burbidge, said he made so much out of second-hand books that he could afford to give away new books! What bookseller can do this now?

When Mr. Burbidge failed Mr. Edkins took up an apprenticeship with Robert Hobson, bookseller and stationer, of Wellington, Salop, and was present at the birth of another paper—The Shropshire News. In 1858 he came to London and joined the firm of Robert Hobson and Wright; he remained here some time and then went to Simpkins, but left there to take charge of the Book Department of the Civil Service Supply Association. He was here for sixteen years and had sole control of the Department, and under his care it progressed wonderfully. An attack of typhoid fever intervened and Mr. Edkins afterwards found the work of the Book Department was telling too much upon his health. He thereupon took to the road, and represented Mr. John Hogg and Mr. Elliot Stock in the South of England. Mr. Edkins has also worked the West and North of England for Mr. Horace Cox, and for some years published the productions of the "Unicorn Press" and the "Orient Press" at his office in 26, Paternoster Square. He is now town representative of three London firms.

MR. J. M. EDKINS
Town Representative of several Publishing Houses

Mr. Edkins has many a good anecdote to tell of incidents that have happened during his long connection with books, but one must hear them from his lips for he has an inimitable way of telling them. Although 74 years of age he is still wonderfully active, doubtless due to his daily walks and the invigorating air of Southend, where he resides.

Naturally a careful man, he is somewhat perturbed at the slightly négligé appearance of his portrait, the only one he possesses, here reproduced; but it was taken some years ago when he was a "youngster" of 65. Possibly the weather was sultry or business heavy and pressing.

The Educational Book Question

By an Educational Contractor and Publisher

I READ your article on educational books and the net book system in this week's issue of the P.C. with much interest and satisfaction. The thoughtful way in which the P.C. deals with vexed questions affecting the profession of bookselling, must strike every one who reads them. The theoretical and practical sides of the questions are usually dealt with in a very able manner. All this applies to the article in question, but there are one or two points I should like to write about, and I am guided by many years' experience as a contractor of school supplies, and as a publisher of school books and apparatus in a fairly large way. In view of this fact, I believe the P.C. might be doing a service to the educational book trade by giving similar prominence to my remarks.

You mention the difficulties in the way of making school books net, and I agree with you. There are a vast number of private schools in the United Kingdom who make a considerable revenue out of the sale to their pupils of school books and stationery who would never submit to adopting net books, except to a very limited extent. Were educational publishers who do not go direct to the schools, to make their books net they would soon be cut out of this market altogether. There would always be the school supply firms who would publish non net books to meet this particular class. Then, again, there are several education authorities who are willing to allow any school supply firm to cater for their wants, provided they give a certain discount, for example, such as Lancashire. In this particular case many firms may be on the list of contractors, provided they allow a certain discount off their publications. Here again, the school supply firms would score. In two-thirds of the schools under the education authorities in Scotland, the headmasters sell the books to the children, and in the majority of cases, make some revenue out of it. In many other schools, however, the master requires a margin of profit in order to make up for the loss of books supplied to children whose parents never pay for them. Teachers often give the books to the children on credit, so that the classes may get on with their work. Teachers in Scotland do, and have sacrificed a great deal in order to maintain the efficiency of their schools. Large numbers of the schools I refer to are situated in rural districts where there are no booksellers or stationers. So far as Scotland is concerned, it will be seen that the headmasters of two-thirds of the schools would strenuously resist the net books, because it would mean a serious loss to them. It is well-known by those engaged in educational publishing, and school supply work, that most education authorities in England and Wales decline to supply their schools with net school books.

Now we come to that part of the road where I part company with the P.C., and on two essential points. After stating the difficulties in the way of net school books, the whole tone of the article is to the effect that there is no other solution to the problem but net books. After the passing of the 1902 Education Bill for England and Wales, hundreds of local booksellers, each of whom used to supply several schools in their district with books and stationery, lost the business; many of them felt the loss keenly, while others went under altogether. Fourteen thousand voluntary schools were taken over by the education authorities, most of whom invited offers for the supply of books, stationery and apparatus. What has happened is well known. The trade is now in the hands of a few supply firms. Would net books send the trade back to the local booksellers? In my opinion, it would not alter the present deplorable state of things. We would just be exactly where we are at present. With library contracts, a certain number of net books are wanted. The more net books there are in the contract, the bigger the discount off subject books. I know City firms who supply subject books to libraries far below the price at which they buy them, and look for a slender 5 per cent. margin, because of the net books. Technically speaking, they in no way violate the net book agreement, but in another way they give a liberal discount off them. There is only one way to stop this sort of thing, and that is by the publishers limiting the amount of discount to be allowed off school books. Personally, I should prefer to have all school books net, but there is a practical side as well as a theoretical side to the question. Net books, at present, are not practical. Well, to use a fine simile of your own, because they (the education authorities) are not like the general public, a fortuitous concourse of atoms.

Now I come to my second point, and it is the last one but the most important. When I read "The schoolmasters must be fought and beaten before they will accept the net system, but the school supply houses must not be fought,"* I felt impelled to take up my pen and a strong desire to reach your readers. This is dangerous advice. I know one great publishing house, who, 25 years ago, thought fit to fight the Schoolmasters. Within 18 months their publications (and there were many) were kicked out of thousands of schools. To fight the schoolmasters would be folly. To fight the school supply houses would be needless. With one, or, perhaps, two exceptions, there is not a school supply house in the United Kingdom but would prefer to have net school books all round, or the discounts limited to a certain amount. They would prefer that the local booksellers should do the greater part of the trade than that school supply houses should be dragged down to the most degraded methods of doing business. No school supply house can afford to give the high discounts now being offered without choosing one of two alternatives: (1) Conduct his business like an honest Briton and lose money, or (2) Resort to questionable methods. Assuming that the publishers who do not go direct had to fight the school supply firms they would win easily. There are forty or fifty educational publishing houses who do not sell direct to schools, but whose publications are largely sold to schools. Thirty of them at least, are strong or vigorous businesses, doing six-sevenths of the school book trade. There are only about half a dozen school supply houses, who are also educational publishers. One-seventh of the school books used are published by them. They may be supplying nearly all the books that are used in the schools, but only a seventh of supply house publications are in use. Of course, the longer the present condition of things lasts, the more rapidly will school supply houses get their own publications into the schools. It will be much easier for the publishers to do something now than when the school supply people get a stronger hold. There is not a school supply firm in Britain to-day, who could carry on the business of school supplies were all the publishers to refuse to sell to them. No bookseller can afford to fight the schoolmasters. It must be remembered that practically all the educational works on the market to-day are compiled by the teachers themselves. There would always be the possibility of teachers combining and publishing non net books.

[*Our view is that it would be a mistake to work in the direction of making school books net against the feeling of the educational supply associations, and that the best policy is for all concerned to work together. Our correspondent admits that the school supply business is not on a satisfactory footing due to ruthless competition. Net school books are a long way off, but we hope to see the net book flag planted on that distant peak some day, but we should be sorry to see that fine body of men and women engaged in teaching injured, even for the benefit of the booksellers.—ED. P.C.]

Finally, I thank you most heartily for advising booksellers not to fight the school supply firms, for the reasons you have so well stated. Although we compete against them in one particular branch of their business, they must not forget that there is such a thing as commercial evolution. The supply firm has been called into being for the supply of education equipment. In these days when education is the fad of the age, specialists are required, and the school supply house will always be a necessity in order to meet the special educational requirements. The supplying of ordinary school books the supply houses could quite well afford to do without much of. In fighting the question, booksellers, will, I am sure, at least admit the necessity for our existence. Then we will get on better and we may be able to help one another in the struggle for existence.

Success through the P.C. "When all other Sources have Failed"

WE have received with much pleasure the following unsolicited testimonial to the value of our advertising columns from Mr. Edward Baker, the well-known bookseller of Birmingham :—

> Mr. Baker writes: "THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has been of great service to me. I often find a book through it when all other sources have failed."

Glastonbury or the English Jerusalem.

MR. GEO. GREGORY, of Bath, has just published "The Historic Guide to the English Jerusalem—Glastonbury," by C. L. Marsom, with sketches by H. J. Stewart, and other illustrations. We hope to refer to this excellent publication in our next issue (it can be obtained in London at Simpkins). Mr. Gregory tells us he has had the honour of supplying copies of this work to Her Majesty Queen Alexandra and the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Notes from Provincial Towns

[Under this heading we publish every week brief notes of book matters from the various provincial towns. We invite our readers to send us any items likely to be of any interest and use to the trade generally. A supply of stamped addressed Report Forms will be sent on application.]

HULL

The book trade here is quiet. With the exception of the cheap editions there is little of importance in demand, unless it be "The Little Green World," by J. E. Buckrose. The writer of the book is a member of a well-known Hull family, and has previously written "The Wood End," "The Toll Bar," "The Wolf," and "Voices." The latest volume will further enhance her reputation.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE

Now that the summer steamboat traffic has commenced to Cardiff and other ports in S. Wales, the book trade here is improving slightly. Welshmen are great lovers of books, especially those relating to theology and music.

Book Notes from Sheffield

By the DON

SHEFFIELD is becoming quite a favourite resort for the promoters of conferences of various kinds. Most of the chief associations of the country have been to the city during the last ten years, and in September we are to have a visit from the Libraries Association, one effect of which, it is to be hoped, will be to stimulate local interest in literature. A committee has been formed to carry out the arrangements in connection with the visit, who are asking for a guarantee fund of £1,000 in order that the City may do justice to the importance of the event.

Every Sheffield person who possesses a spark of civic patriotism will deeply regret that they have not a central library for the visitors to inspect which is a credit to the City. The question of a new building for this purpose has again been under consideration, but the authorities do not possess the courage to ask the ratepayers to sanction the necessary expenditure at this juncture. Sheffield rates continue to go up, and have reached an oppressive point. As an alternative to a new building the present accommodation is to be enlarged, a disused adjoining building having been purchased for housing one of the departments. The completion of this scheme will relieve the congestion of the present library.

The local Shakespeare Society is displaying increased energy and life, and it is now the largest of the societies in the country, the membership numbering more than 700. The organisation is fortunate in possessing an ideal secretary in Mr. S. Gardner Harrison, whose long journalistic experience and literary attainments are proving of great service to the members. A conversazione is being arranged to open next season, October being the month fixed for the function, and Her Highness Princess Mary Louise of Schleswig-Holstein has arranged to be present.

The international editors who are touring the country will be entertained in Sheffield during the present month.

A circulating library and reading room have been established at the Victoria Hall Wesleyan Mission. The library starts with a collection of 900 volumes of religious and general literature.

The members of Mr. Joseph Batey's literary classes, numbering 60, spent Whitsuntide in Paris and other places in France, where they will have the opportunity of visiting towns and objects made familiar through the study of French Revolution literature, which was the main subject dealt with at the classes last season.

Sir W. C. Leng & Co., Ltd., of this city, are publishing at 10s. 6d. net a volume entitled "Peeps into the Past," consisting of extracts from the diaries of Thos. Asline Ward, a prominent Sheffield worthy of the first half of the Nineteenth Century. Mr. Ward was an inveterate diarist, and recorded every local event of interest, his work extending from the year 1800 to 1871. By perusing these pages the reader obtains a vivid picture of the life of Sheffield a century ago. A valuable feature of the book is the annotations by Mr. R. E. Leader, B.A., which trace the connection between personages referred to and their living descendants. Mr. Ward was on intimate terms with Chantrey, the sculptor, Hunter, the antiquarian, and James Montgomery, the poet; and he once unsuccessfully contested a seat for Parliament.

The same firm are publishing at threepence a useful holiday guide, which contains practical information respecting all the more popular seaside and inland resorts.

Question of Copyright

THE action brought at Hull County Court by Messrs. Brown & Sons, booksellers, of that city, against Messrs. Trever & England for infringement of copyright in respect to registers was dismissed with costs by his Honour Judge Dodd, K.C.

The evidence was to the effect that in 1893 new regulations of the Board of Education necessitated alterations in registers. For plaintiffs, it was averred that new registers were drawn up for them by Mr. O'Donoghue, for which he was paid three guineas, this securing them the copyright. Mr. O'Donoghue, who had since died, was then employed in the Education Department, and defendants contended that the copyright belonged to the Education Authority, and the registers were placed on the tables as samples from which to copy.

His Honour held that the claim could not under the circumstances be sustained, and dismissed the action as stated above. —Hull Daily Mail.

"A VETERAN IN REVIVAL."

R. C. MORGAN: HIS LIFE AND TIMES. BY HIS SON GEORGE E. MORGAN, M.A.

With an Introduction by the Rt. HON. LORD KINNAIRD. With 4 Photogravures and 8 Half-tone Plates. Cloth Boards, 5s. od.

ON THIS ROCK. By Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

Author of "Approaching End of the Age," "Creation Centred in Christ," etc. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. net. Post free, 2s. 10d.

The attacks on Religion in the present day made in the name of Science and Philosophy have called forth this timely volume from the pen of Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, who published his first work fifty years ago. The present work deals with the speculations of Philosophy and the certainties of Religion. Commenced during his visit to Japan, and continued in Australia, this work has been completed since Dr. Guinness's return to England after his last missionary tour round the world.

OF ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MORGAN & SCOTT, Ltd., 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

To Help the Children's Hospital

AN unusual and very interesting little volume will be published in a few days by Mr. John Murray, in connection with the great Fancy Fête which is to be held at Olympia, and opened by Her Majesty Queen Alexandra on June 23rd.

The book, the title of which is "In a Good Cause," will consist of short stories and verses by F. Anstey, Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., W. Pett Ridge, Miss Marjorie Bowen, Henry Newbolt, W. Graham Robertson, Owen Seaman, and Tom Gallon, and all profits on sales will be devoted to the funds of the Hospital for Sick Children in Great Ormond Street. Two illustrations by the late Phil May will also be included in the volume, which will be published at 5s. net. We are sure booksellers will willingly help the small sick people by selling the book.

Grieben's Guides

NOW that the tourist season is upon us and booksellers are receiving enquiries on every hand for the most compact and up-to-date guide of the district to which they are going, we are pleased to inform the trade that Messrs. Williams & Norgate are making arrangements to place on the market an English edition of some of Grieben's well-known Guides. The copies will be issued in a very handy form, each volume being furnished with maps and plans, and the size will be 6 by 4¼, nicely bound in cloth, and suitable for placing in the pocket.

The volume on "Switzerland" will be published immediately at 3s. net, which includes nine maps, and will be followed by "The Lakes of Northern Italy," "Norway and Copenhagen" in one volume, also at 3s. each net, and "Ostend and Environs" at 1s. 6d. net. The volume on "Berlin" is already published at 1s. net.

Among other volumes in active preparation may be mentioned "The Rhine," "Belgium," "Holland," "Brussels," "Riviera," "North Sea Watering Places," "Dresden and Environs," &c., which will be announced in due course.

Curtis Yorke's New Story

ONE of the most popular and charming writers of the day is Curtis Yorke; and every admirer of her clever and pleasing stories will be glad to get the new one "Mollie Deverill," which Mr. John Long is publishing, with a frontispiece in colour of Mollie by Mr. Cecil W. Quinnell—quite one of the best things of the kind that has been done. We give a black-and-white copy of it.

THE June No. of The Country Home (Constable & Co.) is as good as ever, and contains many interesting articles, fully illustrated. It is a first-class publication.

MR. EDWARD STANFORD has just published a very useful "Handbook of Cyprus, 1909," with good maps. There is good sea-fishing, though the lazy Cyprians take little advantage of it. The rivers are all dried up in the summer. "Eels are found in some of them, but no fish." But the eel is a fish—and a very good one.

Is Rich America Careless?

THE Americans do not do things by halves. Pensioners of their Civil and other wars take about £28,000,000 yearly out of the nation's income. In celebrating Independence Day (July 4th) since 1903 alone over 2,000 persons have been killed outright or died of lockjaw, and nearly 28,000 have been wounded by guns, pistols, fireworks, &c. We feel inclined to agree with the Atlantic Monthly, which says, "Surely the sorrow, suffering and mutilation here represented mock the claim that our July Fourth, as at present observed, is in any sense a festal day; rather is it a day of terror, anxiety and dread."

Mrs. Lane's Faith in Women

ELINOR MACARTNEY LANE, author of 'Katrine," still another edition of which the Harpers have just announced, is to be remembered among novelists whose stories glorify the influence of woman. "Did you ever realise," Mrs. Lane once said to a friend, "how boundless is woman's power for good or evil? That, it seems to me, is the most wonderful thing in life. A great-souled woman who has lived up to her highest, and is determined to hold every man she meets to his highest, can transform her universe. It is that that has been my guiding thought throughout all my writing."

Cricket in the Trade

ST. THOMAS, FULHAM v. BURNS & OATES C.C.

PLAYED at The Grove, Hanwell, June 6th, resulted in a victory for Burns & Oates, for whom Horseman batted very well. Brittain and Fagge accounted for 6 of the St. Thomas' wickets, taking 3 each. Targett (13) made the highest score for the losing side, and also did good service in the field. Both sides were playing short, and the victory to Burns & Oates was chiefly due to Horseman's good batting, he scoring 36 (not out) of the 52, the total score of his side. The individual scoring on the St. Thomas' side was better, but only totalled 39.

How the Net Book Regulations are Evaded

DEAR SIR,—I should like through your valuable medium to reply in a few lines to "Northern Bookseller." He says, and I know from long experience, that he is quite right, that "Education authorities would get exactly what they ordered from one or other of their own ratepayers instead of being landed with something as good (?) published by the contractor himself."

I have not the slightest doubt that local booksellers could supply orders just as promptly and perhaps more so than the big supply houses. If only the new school books are to be made net, the same thing would happen with contracts for school books as is now happening to contracts for libraries. A goodly number of net books are included in the library contracts, and the large city firms give discounts as follows :—42½ per cent., 45 per cent., and I know one contract at least where 50 per cent. is allowed off non-net books. It is obvious that the booksellers who offer such huge discounts are getting behind the net system. In parliamentary language they are giving a discount off the net books by supplying non-net books below cost price, and in plain English they are prostituting the net system.

It would be a great pity if publishers were put to the trouble of making their new educational works net, and then a similar state of affairs to exist as is now in vogue with library contracts.

The school trade has for years been departing from the local bookseller, and the only way I can see to bring it back is to induce the publishers to limit the amount of discount to be allowed off school books. At the same time, they should be asked to make their new publications net.

I am in perfect sympathy with "Northern Bookseller," but it must be borne in mind that while you have a large number of non-net books, the net book is no protection against ruinous cutting of prices, so far as contracts are concerned.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

AN EDUCATIONAL BOOKSELLER.

[The head of one of our largest educational publishers, writing to us on this question, said "I should like to see all books net, including school books; but at present to extend the net system to school books appears to be impracticable." Anyway it is something to have such an expression of opinion favourable to the idea of net school books from one whose firm is second to none as producers of them.—ED.]

The Booking Fee Question

DEAR SIR,—I am much obliged to Mr. A. C. Fifield for calling attention to error in my letter, which appeared in the P.C. for May 22nd. The word "under" was inserted instead of "over," so that the paragraph referred to should read: "The following additional firms do not charge the booking fee on parcels of over 5s. net—James Clarke & Co., A. C. Fifield, T. N. Foulis, L. Upcott Gill, Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd. The last named excepts magazines."

I find that Chapman & Hall, Ltd., also should be included in the above list.

Yours faithfully,
H. R. FIRMIN.

More Daylight Saved for Recreation

DEAR SIR,—Your readers may be interested to know that at the request of our employés we have decided to alter our business hours. During the months of June, July and August we shall open at 8 o'clock and close at 5.30, and Saturdays 1 o'clock.

By this arrangement about 75 members of our staff will gain an extra hour in the evenings for recreation.—We are, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

PHILIP & TACEY, LTD.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. J. D. & F. R. Bell, 96, Broadway, New York.—"Beautiful Bermuda," by Mrs. Euphemia Young Bell. This excellent little book is nicely got up and well illustrated with some 180 reproductions from photographs, and 9 distinctive maps. It contains much which is of interest and value to those intending to visit Bermuda, either for business or pleasure. It might almost be called a guide, except that it has been written in a bright, interesting manner, and covers more ground than the ordinary guide, as it also embraces some account of the history of the Islands and points of interest about the Government. It can safely be recommended, and the fact that it is in a third edition is proof of its popularity and efficiency.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—"The Wallace Collection. Reproductions from Photographs," by W. A. Mansell & Co., of sixty masterpieces in this the art collection of the fourth Marquess of Hertford, bequeathed to Sir Richard Wallace, and offered by him to the nation. The negotiations, however, fell through, but on the death of Lady Wallace, it was found that she had bequeathed the collection for a national possession.

From the Same.—"Sir Gregory's Silence," by A. W. Marchmont. Anybody fond of reading of a number of deeply-laid plots which take away the characters of quite half a dozen people should read this book. These are so cleverly arranged that no ordinary writer could have thought them out and kept them working together for one end.

From Messrs. Henry J. Drane, Ltd.—"A Rosary of Sonnets, and other Verses," by Anita Monroe. The poetical treatment of this sequence of sonnets shows that their writer has all that is required of delicacy, as well as of passion and melodious tenderness, for this exacting form of verse composition.

From the Same.—"Raveltoft," by Henry Luken, a romantic story of the Orkneys, at the time when they were inhabited by Norsemen, long before the Scandinavian Monarch, with the triple crown pledged them to a Scottish king in lieu of gold. The tone of the book indicates a considerable insight into the customs and mode of living of those long distant days. The sentiment is excellent, and should appeal to all those who appreciate a good love story.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—"The Magic Bowl." R. Andom's latest work concerns some young fellows who, when cruising off the Essex coast, find an old bowl possessing magic properties' half buried in the mud. Naturally there is a slave to the bowl, and a wish is no sooner expressed than it becomes un fait accompli. Some of the resultant adventures are quite thrilling and most amusing, and when the bowl disappears a magic ring continues the story. Mr. Andom has written many jolly books, and his readers will enjoy his latest venture, he has an excellent strain of humour quite free from any trace of vulgarity.

From Messrs. Jordan & Sons, Ltd.—"The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908," by D. S. Hemmant, with Explanatory Notes, Cross References, Comparative Table of Sections of the Repealed Companies Acts and the Corresponding Sections of the Companies' Consolidation Act. Messrs. Jordan's publications are too well-known to need recommendation.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—"Artemis to Actæon and other Verses," by Edith Wharton. If, as a professional critic assures us, "Poetry heightens in all directions, and to an indefinite degree our enjoyment of life," then, we have but little hesitation in saying that the initial poem, as well as "Margaret of Cartona"; the metrical story of the Paduan surgeon, "Vesalius in Zante"; and the stately lines, "A Torchbearer" in this book, cannot fail to be recognised as precious additions to the treasury of English verse. Miss Wharton's work throughout bears the impress of a refined and original mind, and will confirm its author's reputation.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—"Three Poems," by Charles F. Grindrod; "Phantasies," by Gertrude H. Witherby; and "German Lyrists of To-day," by Daisy Broisher. These three little booklets are published in the Vigo Cabinet Series, tastefully got up and well printed on good paper. These additions bring the total of the series up to sixty volumes, and others are promised shortly.

From The North London Christian Evidence League.—A Series of Twelve Lectures on such varied subjects as "What is the Old Testament?" "Biblical Criticism," "The Divinity of Christ," "Pagan Christs," "Prayer," "Christianity and Social Reform," &c. These are published at 3d. net each, and are to be issued bound in cloth.

From Messrs. Routledge & Co.—"Swimming," by Archibald Sinclair. Mr. Sinclair is Vice-President of the Royal Life-Saving Society, and his book on Swimming, a new and revised edition of which has recently been published, is all that one would expect from such a quarter. It is well-written, clear and concise, and makes a most useful text-book, especially for schools and beginners. Many good illustrations are given, and there is a chapter on Water Polo.

From Messrs. Shaw & Sons and Messrs. Butterworth & Co.—"The Factory and Truck Acts," by the late Alex. Redgrave, C.B. An eleventh edition by Chas. F. Lloyd of this important work has recently been published by Messrs. Shaw and Messrs. Butterworth. It contains Statutory

T. FISHER UNWIN, 1, ADELPHI TERRACE, LONDON

Orders, Regulations, Special Rules, and Forms, revised by W. Peacock of the Home Office.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.—"Lyra Evangelistica: Missionary Verses of Mashonaland," by Arthur Shearly Cripps. We can extend a hearty welcome to this poet from across the sea, for though one of Oxford's distinguished sons, it is from Mashonaland that these verses come, and it is with the glamour and sadness of a new country that they are filled. Mr. Cripps has done good work ere this, and was the winner of the Oxford Sacred Poem in 1902. This is enough to guarantee scholarly workmanship, and yet there is something far more precious and far more rare to be found within the covers of this little book—that indefinable power of making us feel "the incommunicable thrill of things" which is the true poet's gift. This is certainly a book to buy.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—"The Way of the Transgressor," by G. L. Dawe. A murder mystery with a strong love interest. Captain Lynton is murdered one foggy night in Warwick Square; he was a complete cad, who got his bread by the shadiest methods. Unfortunately, he was as clever as he was unscrupulous, and he managed to get Vivian Carslake in his toils. Clive Wrensley, secretary to a Cabinet Minister, falls in love with Vivien after a chance meeting near Warwick Square at the time of the murder. All kinds of vague suspicions are born in his mind, and there is a great amount of blackmailing, passion, hysteria and "blood and thunder." It is all smartly done, however, and the story makes excellent railway reading.

From the Same.—"The Backwoodsmen," by Charles G. D. Roberts. A book of tales, some very pretty ones, others telling of daring deeds and of narrow escapes, in which women take a part as well as the men. It is a book boys would thoroughly enjoy.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—"The Magnificent Mummer: some Reflections on the Twentieth Century Stage, its Status and Pretensions," by Horace Wyndham. This is a book which will cause some commotion among actors and actresses. We would prefer to leave the reviewing of it to those concerned. The author, doubtless, hopes to improve the condition of the stage, and we trust he will succeed where improvement may be necessary.

From the Same.—"The Stage Door," by Arthur Applin. Curious thing that a wife after five years' absence does not recognise her husband. He is supposed to be dead, and she has married again. The book is worth reading to see how the author deals with the subject—certainly in a clever manner; but, still, it is incomprehensible, especially with such a very loving wife as the novelist describes her. The first husband's rescue of the second in a burning house is told in a graphic way and the meeting between the two men in the hospital is remarkably well done.

New Editions.—In Messrs. Nelson's Shilling Library may now be purchased a book which we reviewed upon its appearance some three years ago—"Alexander Hamilton: an Essay on American Union," by F. S. Oliver. It is one of the finest biographical works that has appeared of recent years, and in its new form it is sure of a warm welcome. Messrs. Witherby & Co. have issued a second edition, revised and improved, of Mr. D. W. Horner's "Observing and Forecasting the Weather: Meteorology without Instruments." We extend a real welcome to the attractive pocket volume, "A Selection from the Poems of Rural Life," by William Barnes (the Dorsetshire Idyllist), arranged under the editorship of his son, and published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.

FIGHTING SHIPS, 1909

By FRED. T. JANE.

Special interest centres in this year's issue, because in addition to furnishing details of the World's War Vessels, it pays very particular attention to the GERMAN NAVY, on which all eyes are now turned. A special effort has been made to secure plans of the new ships, including the latest "Dreadnoughts." In the JAPANESE NAVY section there is a very complete collection of the reconstructed ex-Russian ships, many of which now present a most remarkable appearance. For the U.S.A. Navy a photograph is given of the first ship to be fitted with the Sims Skeleton Mast. Professor HOVGAARD contributes a remarkable article on "Protection of Warships against Underwater Attack." Mr. CHAS. DE GRAVE SELLS deals at length with "The Progress of Warship Engineering."

THE Publishers' Circular

The Booksellers' Congress

SOON after this issue of the P.C. is published the London Congress of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland will commence.

It was an excellent idea on the part of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton Kent & Co. to invite the visitors to an opening entertainment, to take the form of a conversazione at the Hall of the Stationers' Company, from 8 to 11 on Friday evening, June 18th. It was an excellent idea, because Simpkin's and the other wholesale houses now amalgamated with them have been the London agents of probably all the visiting booksellers and of their fathers, and in some cases of their grandfathers, before them. It would be interesting if Mr. Miles or Mr. Shaylor could tell us how many millions of orders they have executed for booksellers during the last century—or, say, half-century; but probably no data exist which would furnish such details. Anyway, we are quite sure that our friends the booksellers from all parts of the United Kingdom will feel that they are quite at home with their old friends, Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.

On Saturday morning (thanks, again, to the liberality of the Stationers' Company) there will be the business of the Annual Meeting of the Association, when the chair will be taken by Mr. H. W. Keay, J.P., who for so many years has been the greatly respected President of the Association and has worked so hard for it in every way. How many thousands of miles Mr. Keay has travelled on the work of the Association we should not like to say, nor how many speeches he has made.

On Saturday evening there will be the banquet given by the London Branch to the rest of the Association—or to as many of them as have been able to accept invitations. We give below a list of the members of the Association who hope to be present, and are especially glad to see that so many are bringing their wives, on whose behalf an extra prayer for fine weather may be allowed.

In our programme last week we mentioned that the toast of "Art" at the banquet would be proposed by Sir Gilbert Parker; but we understand now that "Art" will be proposed by Lord Guthrie and responded to by Mr. Arthur Diósy, F.R.G.S., the Founder and Vice-President of the Japan Society. The banquet takes place at the Hotel Cecil.

On Sunday morning those who wish to do so can hear a sermon by the Bishop of Peterborough in Westminster Abbey. The text might appropriately enough be the 12th Verse of the 12th Chapter of Ecclesiastes.

On Monday morning there will be another business meeting, and from four to six the reception by the publishers at the White City. On Tuesday an unofficial visit to the Garden City, by invitation of Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, will bring the affair to a close.

In connection with this important event we have great pleasure in giving portraits of some of the original founders of the Booksellers' Association. Of some others of those who lent aid at that most critical time we have so far been unable to obtain portraits. It was very pleasant to get a letter the other day from Mr. Thomas Burleigh, thanking us for help given through the P.C. in those early days, for it is much easier to forget than to remember such things.

The month of roses has, up to this time of writing (June 15th), been very tearful and sorrowful, but now shows signs of a brighter and more genial mood, and we are sure that is all that is required for the complete success of the 1909 Congress.

List of Attending Members

In the following list of those who have said they were coming, the stars indicate the wives of members who will be present with them and the crosses indicate members of the Council. In the list sent to us the ladies were indicated by crosses, but we cannot permit the P.C. to convey an impression that our friends are bearing anything in the nature of a cross with them. Stars, we are sure, are much more appropriate for our brighter and better halves:—

Notes and Announcements

NOVELS by a new writer have ceased to attract very special attention in these days, but Mr. Murray is shortly publishing one which it is expected will win appreciation and success. It is entitled "John Goodchild," and is from the pen of Mr. R. W. Wright Henderson; it is placed in a period which has not been much used by novelists—the time of the great railway mania of 1845.

Dr. Baty, who has attained the degree of Doctorate in Law at each of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge and Dublin, has an important work on International Law appearing shortly with Mr. Murray. This will be, in effect, the authoritative work on a subject which has radically changed its character since the Hague Conference of 1907. Not only does it treat of the many legal questions affected by the deliberations at the Conference, but incidental subjects, such as the bearing of social upheavals on International Relations, are considered.

Messrs. Alston Rivers announce for publication on June 23rd "The Red Rose of Summer," a new novel by Louise Mack (Mrs. Creed), a writer who has already achieved some success in this country, and whose name is a household word in Australia, her birthplace.

Among the American books to be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are a "History of the City of New York in the Seventeenth Century," by Mrs. Schuyler van Rensselaer, in two octavo volumes; a "History of the State of Washington," by Professor Edmund S. Meany, of the University of Washington, with maps, portraits and other illustrations; and a volume of "Selections from Early American Writers, 1607–1800," edited by Professor W. B. Cairns, of the University of Wisconsin, which begins with Captain John Smith (born in 1580) and ends with Charles Brockden Brown (born in 1771), a writer who is often spoken of as the first American novelist.

Messrs. Rebman, Ltd., will publish on June 23rd "The Maniac: a Realistic Study of Madness from the Maniac's Point of View." The book is "a faithful account of a genuine attack of acute mania. Nothing has been invented, from first to last it is a true record."

The same publishers also announce for issue on the same date a new novel by the author of "Morag, the Seal," entitled "Old as the World: a Romance of the Western Islands," by J. W. Brodie Innes.

For a long time Mr. George Moore has been at work upon a new version of his "Sister Teresa," a book, he says, "which has been dreamed and re-dreamed for ten years." The new edition, entirely re-written, is now ready, and will be issued in Mr. Unwin's "Adelphi Library" on June 21st.

Professor J. Wight Duff, of Newcastle, has just completed his "Literary History of Rome," and Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish it on June 21st in his "Library of Literary History." The book, after a sketch of the chief monuments, endeavours to present a systematic account of literary movements and literary figures in Rome from the middle of the third century B.C. to the end of the reign of Augustus. An attempt is made to interest the reader in the personal career and significant qualities of all the important writers.

"Concerning Himself"—a new novel by the Rev. Victor L. Whitechurch, author of that very popular story, "The Canon in Residence"—will be published on June 21st by Mr. Unwin.

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett will issue immediately a new novel entitled "The Lady in Grey," by Mrs. Fred Reynolds, author of "A Quaker Wooing," &c.; "a romantic story of Welsh life and character with a powerful love interest."

Mr. John Long will shortly publish a new novel by Mrs. Coulson Kernahan, entitled "Ashes of Passion." In this story of love, revenge and Nemesis we have a powerful picture of the lengths to which a woman scorned will go to avenge herself, and we see how a man of honour may fall a victim to the subtle devices of an alluring woman.

Mr. John Lane will publish on June 22nd "Wits, Beaux and Beauties of the Georgian Era," by John Fyvie, with a frontispiece and twelve illustrations reproduced from contemporary portraits and prints; "Stained Glass Tours in England," by C. H. Sherrill (author of "Stained Glass Tours in France"), with sixteen illustrations. Windows are the main subject of this book, but the windows lead naturally to the architecture, of which the book contains a very comprehensive idea. Also "A Reformer by Proxy," a novel by John Parkinson.

Morice Gerard is beginning a new serial story, entitled "The League of Life," in The Quiver for July (ready on June 24th). There are many other interesting features in this number.

"Concerning the Last Things" is the title chosen for the Rev. E. W. Lewis's new book, which will be published in a few days by Messrs. H. R. Allenson. For those who want a clear and concise statement of the great changes made in opinion during recent years regarding Death, Judgment, Heaven, Hell and the Second Advent this little book should be useful.

Esperantists will probably be pleased to know that Brother Lawrence's little book of conversations and letters known as "The Practice of the Presence of God" is now passing through the press for their benefit in Esperanto. The translation has been made by Mr. Luyken for the publishers, Messrs. H. R. Allenson.

Messrs. Hurst & Blackett have published "The Ides of March" by Mrs. Baillie Reynolds, and "A Young Man from the Country," by Madame Albanesi, in their wonderfully attractive 7d. cloth series. We have recently had experience of the fact that these handy well printed 7d. novels are a great boon to people, and there are always many thousands of such people who are recovering from illness and want something pleasant to read, and not tiring to hold in the hand. Then people who would never dream of buying a 6s. novel to take for a week-end holiday find these sevenpenny books the very thing. How there can remain any profit on them for the publisher after the author, printer, papermaker, binder, and wholesale bookseller have had theirs we cannot understand, but that after all is not our affair. Subject to a minimum incubation period of two years, we wish good luck to the enterprise which is giving us such good reading in such good form.

Messrs. Skeffington will publish this month a new volume of fourteen Harvest-tide Addresses by the Rev. Vivian R. Lennard.

Our Supplement

WE have pleasure in presenting with this issue a Plate giving the portraits of eight of the founders of the Associated Booksellers. We have not been successful in obtaining photographs of the other four—Mr. W. G. Harrison, Mr. Newton, Mr. Walsh and Mr. Waters.

ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND

As the Associated Booksellers are holding their annual meeting in London this week, it will be interesting to our readers to have a few particulars of the formation of the Society which was destined to be the forerunner of the Association which now embraces nearly the whole of the booksellers of the United Kingdom and Ireland.

During the twenty years that preceded the formation of the London Booksellers' Society, owing to the want of organisation, reckless competition and various other causes, the business of bookselling had become an almost fruitless occupation. A discount of twenty-five per cent. had become general in London and in many of the large towns, and this, notwithstanding the fact that very little profit could be obtained upon high-priced books when sold on these terms.

MR. H. W. KEAY, J.P.

President of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland

At this juncture an animated correspondence, initiated by Mr. Thomas Burleigh, took place in THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, in which the crying evils of the trade were exposed, and a wiser and saner policy was advocated. Nothing, however, accrued until, by a lucky coincidence, Mr. Burleigh was introduced to Mr. F. Calder Turner, and as a result, on

May 15th, 1890,

Mr. F. Calder Turner invited a number of gentlemen to meet at his house, and the following were present—Mr. Beeching, Mr. W. Glaisher, Mr. Newton, Mr. F. Calder Turner, Mr. Brown, Mr. F. Hanson, Mr. Shaylor, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Burleigh, Mr. W. G. Harrison, Mr. Stott, Mr. Waters.

At this meeting a resolution was passed: "That it is desirable to form a London Booksellers' Society," and so comprehensive was the scheme that a second resolution was carried to the effect that "all publishers and booksellers of London and neighbourhood be invited to join." A committee was formed to call a general meeting of the trade. These gentlemen were empowered to formulate a scheme, and draw up resolutions to be submitted to the general meeting.

By permission of the Stationers' Company this meeting took place at Stationers' Hall on June 9th. It was attended by about one hundred and fifty retail booksellers. Mr. Arthur E. Miles presided.

gave a very vivid description of the difficulties under which the trade was labouring, and outlined the scheme which the meeting was called to discuss, concluding his remarks by moving "That it is desirable to form a London Booksellers' Society." After a very interesting discussion in which one bookseller remarked that he never had allowed any discount, and never would, the project was enthusiastically approved, and the Society was formed.

The progress made by the Society during its first year of existence was very satisfactory. Certain firms who had made a practice of selling subject books at a greater discount than twenty-five per cent., were induced by the logic of reason and common sense, aided by a quiet hint from sympathetic publishers, to adopt the usual trade terms. Numerous trade difficulties were adjusted, and the membership rose to one hundred and eighty-six. In the autumn of this year, October 2nd, the was held at the Holborn Restaurant, when about eighty gentlemen were present. Mr. David Stott (President), who was in the chair, congratulated the members upon the great success they had achieved during the few months of their existence, the membership including almost every bookseller in London. He remarked that only one or two publishers had responded to the invitation to join them, and personally he was not sorry, for the Society could be regarded purely as a booksellers' society, and members could work out their own salvation.

Continuing, the speaker said that some publishers were most liberal in their terms, and were willing to meet the booksellers, and enable them to earn a modest living, but other publishers were not liberal, and he feared they must go to the wall (laughter). He was sorry for those publishers, but their day had gone.

However, it is gratifying to know that the publishers referred to have not "gone." They are with us still, and by long-continued and persistent efforts on the part of the booksellers they have been induced to modify the terms on some of their books, but much remains to be desired in this respect. At the

the Council expressed a wish to see branch societies established in all large towns—these being affiliated to the London Society. Subsequently negotiations were opened with several of the leading booksellers in the Provinces. Expressions of opinion were invited as to the wisdom of joining forces—but these were so varied that considerable time elapsed before any satisfactory amalgamation could be effected.

In the meantime the Council felt that the desired improvement in the trade could only be secured by a very large extension of so happily initiated by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. They communicated these views to several of the leading publishers, and received some very sympathetic replies.

At the general meeting following the receipt of these letters, it was resolved that the London trade would support the publishers in their efforts to extend the net system—at the same time calling upon the publishers of net books to decline to supply any booksellers who sold these books at any reduced price. Signatures in favour of this action being adopted were obtained from nearly every member of the trade, only two or three refusing.

A circular letter was forwarded to the publishers urging them to extend the net system, and suggesting that a combination of publishers and booksellers should be formed to regulate the prices at which books should be sold to the public. In response to this request a was held, and after carefully considering the matter, they replied that "the only possibility of giving effect to the proposal lay in concerted action by the publishers, and that such concerted action was at present unattainable."

In this connection a letter was received from a publisher stating that he was requested by his colleagues to say, "The publishers would naturally be glad if it was practicable to relieve the booksellers from that pressure of competition which seems to be the common lot of humanity. The reasons, however, which in 1852 caused a similar attempt to fail, were still operative. The judgment of Lord Campbell, Dean Milman, and Mr. Grote, was quoted to the effect that the suggested regulations seem prima facie to be indefensible, &c." The letter continued: "This doctrine, which seemed reasonable and expedient to Lord Campbell and others forty years ago, does not seem less reasonable now. It may therefore be taken that any combination of booksellers and publishers—originated for the purpose of regulating prices to the public, and enforced by coercion or exclusive dealing is altogether unpracticable."

Nothing daunted by this rebuff, the Council considered that the judgment of 1852 was based upon a misconception of the facts and circumstances, and that it was incompatible with the requirements of the present time. They therefore urged a reconsideration of the matter, especially as Messrs. Macmillan had determined to protect their net books at all costs, and five other firms had resolved not to supply their net books to any bookseller selling them at less than the published price.

It is worthy of mention that the publisher who most consistently helped the booksellers at this time was who published all his books at net prices. He was quickly followed by Mr. J. M. Dent, whose business developed very rapidly, being built up principally under the net system.

Net books began to increase rapidly. Timid publishers realised the wisdom of the advice so constantly and persistently urged upon them, and, one after another, offered their net books to the trade only on condition that they were sold at the published prices. This rule very quickly became general. The policy advocated by the booksellers was completely vindicated, and the judgment of Lord Campbell was relegated to the limbo of forgotten things!

By the autumn of 1894 a number of country booksellers had joined the London Society. The imaginary difficulties which stood in the way of their working with the London trade were found to be illusory. It was recognised that the Society was working for the general good, and so, in order to extend its operations, the Council determined to revise the rules, and make every bookseller in the United Kingdom eligible for membership of "The Associated Booksellers of Great Britain."

Shortly after this the name of the Association was again altered by the addition of the words "and Ireland." Of the twelve gentlemen who initiated the formation of the Society, only four are now actively engaged as retail booksellers, viz.: Mr. Brown, Mr. Burleigh, Mr. Hanson, and Mr. F. Calder Turner. Three have retired from business—Mr. W. Glaisher, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. Walsh. Mr. Stott, Mr. Beeching, and Mr. Newton have adopted more lucrative callings. Mr. Waters died some years ago, and Mr. Shaylor is a Managing Director of the historic house of Simpkin.

In April, 1895,

read a paper to the Associated Booksellers on the system adopted in Germany for the prevention of underselling, and for promoting the sale of books. He commenced his most interesting address by asserting that "nothing is so helpful to success as the exchange of opinions and experiences among people engaged in the same pursuit," and remarked that "almost the only business in which no such understanding nor corporate organisation exists, is that of the makers and distributors of books," and he maintained that "in no business is there more reason for some sort of understanding among its members than in our business."

The adoption of this policy has been constantly advocated by the booksellers. They have, however, received very little encouragement from the publishers who have been constrained to act with them only in cases of acute crises.

Mr. Heinemann concluded his address with the following advice. "Protect your interests, your collective interests, as they did in Germany eight years ago under difficulties greater than are yours at the present moment; insist on a living profit, and put down those who are frivolously dissipating your financial possibilities. . . . My one feeling of sorrow and regret is that the movement is not at present shared largely enough by members of my branch of our business. . . . But they will come in when they see that you are determined to have your way, just as their sleepy confrères did in Germany."

Fourteen years have passed since this excellent advice was given, but how little progress has been made! Now that its author presides over the Publishers' Association, when matters vitally affecting the interests of authors, publishers and booksellers alike call urgently for mutual consideration and discussion; is it too much to hope that steps will be taken to constitute a Joint Committee which will be able to discuss matters from all points of view, and evolve a solution that will be advantageous to all concerned?

The Law Stationers at the Banquet of the Associated Booksellers

THE Law Publishers of London are being represented at the dinner of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland by Mr. and Hrs. H. Maxwell (of the firm of Messrs. Sweet & Maxwell), who have a most extensive country connection and are anxious to meet many of their customers personally.

On the Social and Intellectual Status of Booksellers

A WELL-KNOWN London bookseller said to the writer, not long ago, "The profession of bookselling ought to be quite as honourable as the profession of letters, and an intelligent antiquarian bookseller should receive the same social recognition as a University professor." And from this text my antiquarian friend preached an eloquent sermon on the possible dignity and honour of his calling. His remarks were calculated to set one thinking. Is this statement of his extravagant and foolish, or is it sane and reasonable? Is a second-hand bookseller merely a humble dealer whose only object is the necessary bread and butter, or is he a member of an estimable and respectable profession? Or, to apply the theory to the whole, are English second-hand booksellers, as a class, worthy to be the associates and compeers of lecturers and professors in our Universities?

We may safely say, surely, that at present at all events, whatever possibilities may lie dormant in "the trade," English antiquarian booksellers cannot seriously be considered as being in any way comparable with University men of any position whatever. The average second-hand bookseller is far too engrossed in money-making to take much pride in his work as a profession. Many booksellers, it is to be feared, not only lack the slightest smattering of literary knowledge, but have no desire to attain to the least degree of culture; and it is this type of bookseller, forming, in England at least, the great body of the trade, who give to the whole their reputation for illiteracy and ignorance of all beside the titles and prices of the books they spend their lives in selling.

But is this a fair way of judging the possibilities of the profession? Is it the best way of finding an answer to my friend the antiquary's statement? Ought we not rather to judge from the highest types, and not from the average or lower ones? If there are among the second-hand booksellers men of low ideals, of "little Latin and less Greek," certainly there are also, and particularly in Scotland, choice minds, accomplished scholars, men of broad and deep culture in things human and divine; and what the second-hand booksellers need to do is to realise how small and unlovely is their present conception of their work, to get a clear vision of what that work might be, and then to set to work to realise a worthy and lofty ideal. What stands to hinder? It is what has already been spoken of, the inordinate importance attached to the monetary side of the business; not that finance is unimportant, or that booksellers are more avaricious than other men, but, after all, there should be less temptation to sharp practice and hard commercialism in a profession which deals continually with the works of the greatest men, than in purely industrial and commercial occupations, so that it is reasonable to expect and to hope for a higher standard of thought and action from booksellers than from those engaged in many other professions.

Shall we not then accept this higher standard and each do our part to raise our profession to that high place which it should rightfully occupy? Our social and intellectual status depends upon our moral and intellectual strength and vigour, and the power of character which has placed Englishmen in the front rank from a purely commercial point of view, can surely raise us to the true level of scholarship and general culture to which all true booklovers aspire.

R. H.

[It is always well to aim high, and R. H., who is himself an antiquarian bookseller, raises an interesting but, we fear, fruitless question. As long as our society is constituted as it is, what can it mean but disappointment for a second-hand bookseller to claim the same social recognition as the University professor? Because some are of attainments equal to those of the Professor, that does not lift the whole trade to the same level. The trade is a perfectly honourable one, but it is a trade, not a profession. It must not be supposed that we endorse all he says as to the position and aims of the secondhand booksellers.—Ed.]

The Hon. Secretary of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland

MR. EDWIN PEARCE

At the present moment a brief sketch of Mr. Edwin Pearce, whose portrait we are able to reproduce, the genial Honorary Secretary of the A.B., and a word or two about the Wessex Press, with which he is intimately connected, will be of interest to our readers.

The business which is now carried on by Barnicott & Pearce in Fore Street, Taunton, was established in the latter part of the Eighteenth Century, so that it is now over a hundred years old. It passed into the hands of James Barnicott about 70 years ago, and in the year 1870 it became Barnicott & Son on the admission of his third son, Reginald. This association lasted till the death of Mr. Barnicott, Senior, in 1877, when a younger son, Adolphus, joined his brother—a partnership which lasted till 1883.

MR. EDWIN PEARCE
Hon. Secretary of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland

The style of the firm remained unaltered, however, up to the year 1891, when Mr. Edwin Pearce, who had for 16 years been connected with the business and for several years as Manager, was taken into partnership. This continued under the most happy associations till the death of Mr. Barnicott in 1905. Since that time it has been conducted under the management of Mr. Edwin Pearce, with whom is also associated the second son of his former partner.

The premises in Fore Street consist of a substantial block of buildings, three storeys high, and comprise extensive printing office and bindery, equipped with plant and machinery of the latest and most improved type, and possessing every facility for turning out the best class of work in the most finished and satisfactory manner. The ground floor is occupied as a packing room. The composing room occupies the whole of the next floor, and is fitted throughout with "frames" of unique construction, the design of the late Mr. Reginald Barnicott, for the greater convenience of the workmen and economy of space. Above stretches the series of binding, stamping and paper rooms, and one of Waygood's useful lifts connects the three storeys and facilitates the transmission of goods, formes, &c., between the respective floors. The progress of the business during the last few years necessitating an extension, an available space at the rear of the existing premises was utilised and a convenient building adapted to modern ideas erected and fully equipped with machinery suitable for present-day requirements.

The premises are fitted with hot-water pipes, and the ample provision made for light and air conduces alike to the necessities of business and comfort of the employees. This hive of industry is well filled with a numerous staff of workers, both male and female, a large proportion of whom have been in the business for long periods.

Only within a few years one of the foremen died who had worked continuously for the firm for more than fifty years, and on the recent occasion of the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Pearce, the unique gift of an autograph album from the whole of the staff showed that many had been in the service of this firm for over a quarter of a century.

The house of Barnicott & Pearce enjoys a well-earned prestige, and can be relied upon to execute everything it undertakes in first-class style.

"Folk Songs from Somerset," collected by Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, and of which five parts have been issued, are published by the Wessex Press, and some recent publications include "Chapters on the Early History of Glastonbury Abbey," by Rev. W. H. P. Greswell, and "Four Somerset Bishops, 1136–1242," by Rev. C. M. Church. "The Civil War in Dorset, 1642–1660," by A. R. Bayley, will be published shortly.

Mr. Edwin Pearce became Hon. Sec. of the Associated Booksellers on the retirement of Mr. Burleigh, in 1899, and his intimate connection with the trade through the well-known catalogues issued by his firm seemed to point to him as being suited for this office, and nothing affords him greater pleasure than acting in the interest and welfare of his brother booksellers.

"The Life and Times of Laurence Sterne," by Professor Wilbur L. Cross, of Yale University, will be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

ABERCARN.

Owing to the lock-out at the Prince of Wales Pit and the masters' notices to cease contracts at the end of June the book trade in this district is very quiet—so much does one trade depend upon another.

BLACKPOOL

Whitsuntide is over. Business done has been very disappointing, visitors evidently having little money to spend. The sixpenny paper backs and attractive reprints of the classics are the only books which have sold. The sevenpenny reprint has not been asked for. The cloth-bound shilling reprints of popular fiction maintain a steady turnover.

CAMBRIDGE

Messrs. W. Heffer & Sons (London: S. Marshall & Co.) have just published a little brochure entitled "The Sleepers," by M.P. It is a humorous skit on the results of the passing of the Daylight Saving Bill, and is, we hope, not a prophetic forecast.

ENNIS

The book trade of co. Clare is chiefly with the United States of America and Argentina, except in the matter of sixpenny novels, almanacks, road maps, &c. Mr. J. Hayes, M.R.S.A.I., of Church Street, who has been thirty-eight years in business, is owner of most of General Savary's books, which were read by Napoleon while he was favourite. General Savary's son, the second Duke de Rovigo, married and settled down for a time in Ennis. Mr. Hayes' collections of stamps, autograph letters, pictures and Savary's books will be sold by Sotheby next season. After more than one hundred years of unsuccessful search by many experts for Le Blond mezzotints Mr. Hayes has discovered three unique ones, which are the best in existence. They are oval portraits of ladies, after Lely. Mr. Hayes' discoveries, as given in Notes & Queries for many years past, are remarkable.

FOLKESTONE

Book trade very dull. Sevenpenny net novels are getting into secondhand furniture dealers' shops and are being sold at threepence or fourpence each. They appear to be quite clean and in good condition. Has this been noticed in other towns?

INVERNESS

We noticed in The Scotsman the other day intimation of the marriage of the well-known young Inverness bookseller, Mr. D. Melven (of Melven Bros.), who is a member of the committee of the Scottish Branch of the Associated Booksellers.

IPSWICH

Trade here is in a normal condition. Anyone requiring copies of Fitzgerald Centenary Volume (2s. 6d. net) should make speedy application to "The Ancient House," or Mr. Page-Hunt, Tavern Street.

LEICESTER

The reputation of this town as a book-buying centre has always been distinctly bad, and the present state of trade is best described by the common but somewhat inelegant word, "Rotten!" The death of George Meredith has caused a fairly brisk demand for his works in the sevenpenny edition! A local bookseller's association would be a great advantage. Possibly before the winter season approaches someone will take the initiative in forming one.

LIVERPOOL

Mr. Edward Howell, 83, Church Street, has just issued a new catalogue (No. 164, New Series) of books and engravings from the Mould Collection, the libraries of C. T. Owen, E. Montgomery, &c.

MANCHESTER

Trade improving slightly after the long local holiday; but demand is mostly for the cheap reprints and though the number and bulk of the parcels sent out each day seem large, the amount of turnover and profit are exceedingly small. Who was the publisher's traveller who came to Manchester at the end of Whit-week and found all the shops closed, and why was not a shorthand writer at hand to take down his "observations"? Manchester takes more holidays than any other city in the country, and they seem to be extending year by year. Do we work harder here than elsewhere?

OXFORD

Messrs. Horser & Storey, 33, High Street, have just published their Catalogue No. 4 (1909) of secondhand books. Nearly 300 books are catalogued, including many scarce items.

SOUTHAMPTON

Mr. Janverin, bookseller, of 28, Bellevue Road, has removed to 79, Portswood Road.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE

Messrs. Methuen & Co. have two books which should command a large sale from Bristol westward during this season. In view of the visit of the Prince of Wales to Wells and Glastonbury, Canon Scott Holmes' book, "Wells and Glastonbury," will be found of great interest, and as all country booksellers now possess a 60-h.p. motor they cannot do better than present their chauffeur with a copy of C. N. and A. M. Williamson's new book, "Set in Silver," with instructions to follow the route of Sir Lionel Pendragon from Penzance along the lovely Devon and Somerset coast to Weston, Wells, Cheddar and Bristol.

YORK

The book trade here is exceedingly quiet. With the exception of the cheap editions of Messrs. Macmillan's and Messrs. Hurst & Blackett's, there is no demand for other works. Natural history and books on nature study were in request a few weeks ago; but there is a decided change in this respect, and it is to be hoped that trade will revive in the near future. The booksellers are, however, looking forward to holiday-time, when they expect a large demand for the cheap works of fiction.

Messrs. Jones & Evans Booksellers, Ltd.

77, QUEEN STREET, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON

THE business of Messrs. Jones & Evans was originally Messrs. Sotheran's City house, which was founded in 1816 in Tower Street, so the present proprietors come of good stock and have a notable reputation to live up to.

Owing to street improvements in the City the firm moved to the present premises at Queen Street, and on the retirement of Mr. Sotheran, his partner, Mr. Edward Jones, purchased and carried on the business until 1891, when he was joined by Mr. F. H. Evans. The title of the firm was then altered to Jones & Evans, and after a brief partnership of four months Mr. Jones died.

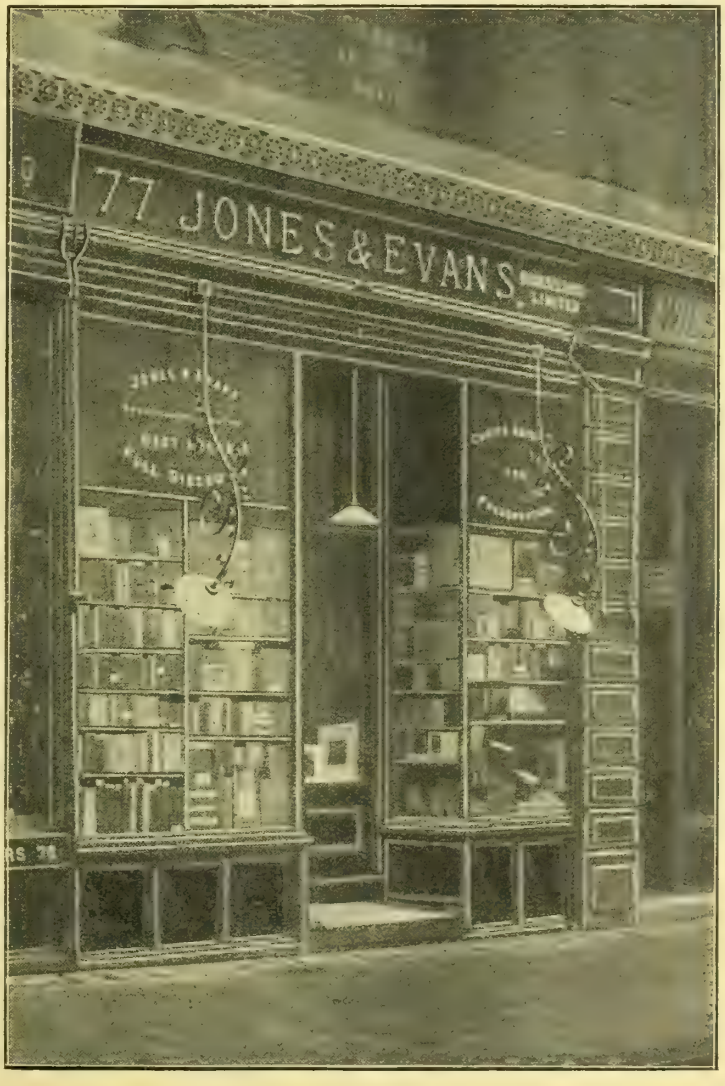
MR. W. T. WHITTAKER
Chairman of Messrs. Jones & Evans Booksellers, Ltd.

Mr. Frederick H. Evans, in addition to being a connoisseur in regard to books, of which he is a great admirer, is famous for his wonderful skill in photography. Many exhibitions of his work have been held, and examples of his work were shown at the Franco-British Exhibition last year. In 1898 Mr. Evans retired, and for family reasons the business of Jones & Evans was turned into a private limited company, with Mr. W. T. Whittaker (whose portrait we are able to reproduce) and Mr. A. F. Tait as managing directors. Mr. Tait died on June 4th, after a short illness, at the age of sixty-four.

Mr. W. T. Whittaker, chairman of the company, was one of those now rare beings—an apprentice, being apprenticed in 1885 to the firm of Messrs. Bickers & Son, Leicester Square, W.C. He was apprenticed for three years, and continued with Messrs. Bickers in various capacities until he came into the business of Messrs. Jones & Evans.



Mr. Whittaker thinks very highly of the apprentice system, bearing in mind the excellent training he received at his old house. He is a cockney by birth and is a Freeman of the City of London. A somewhat curious coincidence is that Mr. Whittaker was born over a bookshop in Great Queen Street, Holborn, and is now in business in Queen Street, City. He should therefore take to books as naturally as a duck to water. He is a Vice-President of the National Book Trade Provident Society.

The late Mr. A. F. Tait was also an apprentice, serving with Mr. William Patterson, of Edinburgh. He had many years' provincial experience, and was connected with Messrs. Jones & Evans for nearly thirty years. His knowledge of books was very extensive, especially of old and rare books, and it was through his instrumentality that the unique Caxton recently sold at Sotheby's for £2,600 was unearthed from its long obscurity.

The firm of Jones & Evans have always tried to uphold the best traditions of the book trade, and it has always been their endeavour to consider it more of a profession than a trade. They specialise in fine editions, and in many cases, where limited issues have been published, have sold 10 per cent. or more of the edition. Their foreign trade is very considerable, and many corporate bodies and Colonial Governments and libraries are on their books.

As an indication of their attitude towards cheap literature, the following is quoted from a circular sent out by Messrs. Jones & Evans:—"One of the effects of the great popularisation of well-known works of genius has been to create a demand for such works in a superior form. They therefore regard cheap books with a friendly eye, and supply them with gratification, knowing that they often stimulate the desire for the same books in better and more dignified garb."

Captain Shaw has rapidly won favour as a writer of stirring tales of the sea, and his new book, "A Daughter of the Storm," just published by Messrs. Cassell, will rank with the best of his work. Incidentally, the book shows the risk to our mercantile service of engaging so many alien sailors.

The Wear and Tear of Public Library Books

THE wear and tear of public library books almost passes belief. For example, the Buffalo Library was obliged last year to withdraw (and, we infer replace with new copies) 21,148 volumes, or nearly 10 per cent. of the total number of books in its possession. It must have been the case with many of these discarded books that, though too shabby for circulation or even for rebinding, they were still readable and in a condition to prove acceptable gifts to hospitals, asylums, mining camps, prisons, forest-dwellers, sailing-ship crews, night-watchmen, or other persons of enforced leisure and blessed with more appetite for reading than the wherewithal to satisfy it. The current report of the Minnesota Public Library Commission has a paragraph pertinent to this matter. "Each year a number of lumber camps throughout the state are given a supply of reading matter. Boxes are filled with books which have been withdrawn from the travelling libraries for various reasons, and which are in readable but short-lived condition, and with popular, illustrated magazines from the clearing house. Only books of live interest are sent, and these are varied to appeal to different tastes. In the past two years 36 camps have been supplied, and in this way 478 books and 1,159 magazines were distributed." There are, doubtless, many neglected opportunities for this sort of benefaction in both city and country.—Chicago Dial.

The P.C. Indispensable to Booksellers

LAST week we published with much pleasure a very complimentary testimonial from Mr. Ed. Baker, of Birmingham. We have since received the following from another well-known bookseller, Mr. John A. Anderson, of Peebles :—

Mr. Anderson writes: "I find the P.C. an admirable trade journal. It is a tool no worker in the book trade ought to be without."

Few things give an editor more pleasure than such unsolicited expressions of appreciation.

Mr. Taft and Mr. David Bryce

THE reproduction of a letter from the new President of the United States may be of interest to our readers. The story of how it came to Mr. David Bryce is briefly as follows: An American friend, knowing Mr. Bryce's passion for producing miniature editions, sent on a paragraph from a States paper announcing that the Congress Librarian was making a special exhibit of daintily printed books of a small size. Mr. Bryce wrote to the Librarian asking for particulars, and received a very courteous letter to the effect that no such exhibition had been heard of at Washington, and suggesting that the announcement must have been the work of some literary man scenting for copy. The Librarian turned out to be an old colleague of Mr. Bryce's, and a set of the small books was forwarded for his delectation. The opportunity was taken of sending a special set to the President, and was covered by a note congratulating him on his new office. President Taft replied in the letter we have reproduced. Mr. David Bryce's career as a publisher in Glasgow must be extremely interesting, for he has worked along certain lines in an almost unique fashion. Some day, soon we hope, to give some account of it.

Unpublished Magazines

DETECTIVE BETTERIDGE had received certain information, he informed the Alderman at the Guildhall, which led him to stop Frederick Ingarfield, a bookseller's collector, living in Welfield Road, Streatham, in Cannon Row.

The detective stated that he asked Ingarfield whether he had any magazines in his bag, and he said "No"; but afterwards he produced twenty-four copies of the July number of a sixpenny magazine which would not be issued to the trade till the 17th of this month. He then said that he was minding them for a man whose name he gave, and who, it appeared, had just come out of prison after serving his term for book robberies.

The Alderman supposed that as the magazines had not been issued they must have been stolen.

"Either from the printers or from the publishers," replied the officer. "There is always a leakage."

Ingarfield was remanded on his own bail.—Evening News.

Obituary

WE regret to hear of the death of Mr. H. P. Tindall, who has represented Mr. Ernest Nister in the north of England, Scotland, Dublin and Belfast since the year 1890. He died after an illness of only three days' duration at Glasgow on the evening of the 6th inst. Mr. Tindall was very highly esteemed by a large circle of business friends.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

The Late Mr. Ernest Nister

WE regret to record the death, after a short illness, of the well-known fine art printer and publisher, Mr. Ernest Nister, which occurred on May 26th at his residence in Nuremberg.

Mr. Nister was born in 1842 at Oberklingen, in Hessen. The son of a clergyman, but having lost his father at an early age, he spent the greater part of his youth at Darmstadt, where he entered upon his mercantile career. During a sojourn of many years in Holland, Belgium, France, Austria, England and America he gathered a large fund of experience which enabled him to develop the small lithographic business at Nuremberg, which he took over in 1877, into one of the largest and most important fine art printing establishments in the world.

The firm employs about six hundred hands and possesses in addition to the lithographic establishment a large printing house, photographic, stereo and electrotyping departments, an important English and American publishing business with branches in Nuremberg and Leipzig.

Mr. Nister was for many years member and Vice-President of the Chamber of Commerce, Nuremberg, one of the Board of Directors of the Industrial Museum, President of the Association for the Protection of the Paper Industry, also President of many other trade associations, in which offices he found ample opportunity of rendering valuable service in the interests of the chromo-lithographic and paper industry. The Government frequently sought his counsel, which was appreciated everywhere, and generally led to the accomplishment of the desired end. His productions in the field of artistic printing are among the best which have appeared on the market, and through their technical and artistic perfection have done much to build up the reputation which the firm has gained of being one of the leading fine art publishers.

The Nuremberg business will be conducted on the same lines as hitherto by Mr. Nister's partner, Mr. Theodor Loefftz, who is well-known in London, in conjunction with Mr. Benda, who has for many years been connected with the firm. The English publishing business, which has been under the management of Mr. W. G. Sleeman from its start, was established in the year 1888 at 24, St. Bride Street, but, larger premises being required, was removed to Nos. 26 and 28, St. Bride Street, in the year 1906. In recent years a special order department for show cards and advertising novelties has been added, this being conducted by Mr. C. Lipp. The editorial and artistic departments, under the joint care of Messrs. A. C. Playne and R. C. Cowtan, occupy a splendid suite of offices at Millbank House, Westminster.

The June number of The Dickensian, edited by Mr. B. W. Matz, is as interesting as ever, an outstanding feature being a hitherto unpublished portrait of Dickens, taken in New York during the novelist's second American tour.

British Museum Prints

Alleged Mutilation of Valuable Books

JOHN PETER COSTER, a surgical instrument maker, appeared before Mr. Marsham at Bow Street Police Court last Monday, on a charge of stealing nine prints, value £2 5s., from books in the Reading Room of the British Museum.

Mr. George Frederick Barwick, the Superintendent of the Reading Room, said that three of the plates were cut out of some very valuable books on Saturday. The value of the books was considerably reduced by the abstraction of the prints.

An attendant named Gatfield said that on Saturday he was in the top gallery of the Reading Room, overlooking the accused, and saw him taking prints from the books.

Inspector Joseph Nicholls, who mentioned that he retired on pension the day before, said that when the charge was read to the accused at Tottenham Court Road station, he replied: "I did not steal these plates. They were on the floor. I wrapped them in the newspaper, and put them in my pocket." A pawn-ticket being found on him, the witness visited a shop in the Borough, and obtained six other plates.

John V. Willis, pawnbroker's manager, said that the six prints were pledged on May 27th. He had known the accused about six months, Coster having previously pledged articles with him—always prints. The accused asked for 30s. on the prints, and was given 10s.

The accused was remanded.

The books from which the prints are alleged to have been taken are "Le Théâtre des Peintures de David Teniers" (printed at Brussels in 1660), from which two prints are missing, and an old Dutch copy, printed in 1707, of Vanderaa's collection of "Travels by Sea and Land in the East and West Indies."—Daily Mail.

Historic Guide to Glastonbury

THE Historic Guide to Glastonbury, by the Rev. C. L. Marson, published a fortnight ago by Mr. George Gregory, of 5, Argyle Street, Bath, has already nearly reached its third thousand. Mr. Gregory has had the exceptional honour of supplying copies to His Majesty the King, Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, and the demand for this charming volume continues unabated. It contains many sketches by Mr. H. S. Stewart. There is a picture of the exquisite north door of St. Joseph's Chapel of Our Lady, with its beautiful Norman mouldings. As the author says, "There is no possible reason why this place should not be restore."

Motherwell and the Little Minister

MOTHERWELL is being discovered here on account of its religious troubles, and Londoners are advised to-day that it is the "Mushroom City" of Scotland. Fifty years ago, they are told, this busy town of steelmakers, bridge-builders, and coal miners was but a lonely hamlet with a few hundred inhabitants, and it is added with caution that admirers of kailyard literature may be interested to learn that Motherwell was for fifty years the scene of the labours of the original of Barrie's "Little Minister." This was the novelist's uncle, the late Dr. Ogilvy, the genial and pawky pulpit orator of the local Free Kirk. In the days of his youth Barrie was a frequent visitor to the town, and many a time occupied a seat in the manse pew.—Glasgow News.

British Museum's Loss

SIR EDWARD MAUNDE THOMPSON, says the Daily Mail, has resigned the appointment of Director and Principal Librarian of the British Museum.

Before his appointment as chief librarian in 1888—he has been in the service of the Museum for the past forty-eight years—he was in the Manuscript Department, rising to the position of Keeper.

Sir Edward initiated many improvements at the Museum. He caused several guide books to be prepared, so that the rich treasures which are stored in the Museum might be made accessible to non-technical visitors, and numerous useful handbooks, dealing with various subjects, have been published. During his régime electric lighting has been installed.

Letters to the Editor

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.

The Sevenpenny Novel

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly permit me to take strong exception to Mr. Ruck's opinion "that it is useless to fight against the latest craze" on the assumption he advances "that it can be produced at a profit to the publishers."

How does he substantiate such an assertion?

Machinery with all its ever-increasing power has not yet reached the point to produce the 7d. book at a living wage to the producer—and where does the poor bookseller come in? In the provinces he must sell one hundred books daily to earn a gross profit of 12s. 6d. Is the game worth the candle? The same book at 1s. net would sell equally as well and leave bread and butter for the workers instead of a dry crust. The 6s. novel owes its death more to the worthless, insipid trash which has flooded the market at a price that would be dear at 1s., hundreds of which can be bought at 8d. or even less.

For the work of a sterling good author there is still a good return at 6s. (nominal 4s. 6d.), profitable alike to all concerned. But for a novel by any one of a mediocre calibre, Mr. Ruck's suggestion of 3s. is worth the consideration of the producers.

I can speak from a wide and practical knowledge when I state the 7d. novel is cursed by the trade as heartily as was the Jackdaw of Rheims.

Yours truly,
D. W. BARDSLEY.

Oldham.

A Correction

DEAR SIR,—We are obliged for your notices of our publications in THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, but would point out that a slight error has been made in the announcement of Gore-Browne and Jordan's "Handbook on Joint Stock Companies." It should be "30th edition," not 13th. Kindly correct and oblige.—Yours faithfully,

JORDAN & SONS, LTD.

[We regret, in noticing the above recently, that by an error the edition was given as the 13th; it should have been the 30th. Messrs. Wm. Jordan and F. Gore-Browne, K.C., are the joint authors.—ED.]

Misbound and Imperfect Books

DEAR SIR,—We desire to draw attention to the increasing frequency of errors in collating which is becoming a matter of serious inconvenience and loss to booksellers, and especially to those who, like ourselves, are engaged in Colonial and Foreign trade. Hitherto we have modestly claimed from the publisher only the bare cost of postage home from our Colonial branch, and even this has in some cases been grudgingly allowed and made dependent on the sight of the actual stamped wrapper used. Such compensation is, of course, quite inadequate in view of the fact that frequently the book has been posted from the store to the customer and further expenses have been incurred by the return of the misbound book and the exchange of another copy, in addition to apologetic and soothing correspondence.

We consider that publishers should pay full compensation for the whole of the expense incurred, and we intend to claim this in future.

It is also a matter of considerable importance to our Colonial friends, who may reside in remote places of the globe, when they find an important book on legal, medical, or technical subjects does not contain the very reference or section that is wanted at a particular moment.

Here, again, the blame, and loss probably also, falls on the poor bookseller, and who can estimate in figures, "moral and intellectual damage"?—Yours, etc.,

ADAMS & REES.

Wiser than His Teachers

DEAR SIR,—I "am wiser than all my teachers," who have so kindly, on many occasions, informed me by postcard, that "Lytton's Dramatic Works," Knebworth Edition, Vol. 2, was never published. Here is a postcard to hand this morning offering the volume; further the date of publication, 1876, is identical with my Vol. 1. Believing in the virtue of Perseverance, I have for months advertised in the P.C. for this volume, and the P.C. has found it for me. Please favour me by inserting this letter in your valuable journal.

Yours faithfully,
E. B. WILDMAN.

Presented to Hampstead

Dalziel Wood-Engravings

To the Art Critic, "Publishers' Circular"

SIR,—May I call your attention to a collection of India-proofs of wood-engravings by the Brothers Dalziel, which I have this day presented to the Borough of Hampstead.

The collection comprises 73 frames, containing 250 India-proofs—extending over the period 1853 to 1883—and includes much of the best work of the Brothers Dalziel during the "Sixties."

The drawings were made direct on the wood-block—except in some few cases where they were made on paper and photographed on to the wood-block—by the following artist:—Lord Leighton, P.R.A., Sir John Everett Millais, Bart., P.R.A., Sir Edward J. Poynter, Bart., P.R.A., Sir John Gilbert, R.A., P.R.W.S., Richard Ansdell, R.A., C. W. Cope, R.A., John Pettie, R.A., Daniel Maclise, R.A., G. F. Watts, O.M., R.A., H. H. Armstead, R.A., Alfred Elmore, R.A., F. R. Pickersgill, R.A., Frederick Walker, A.R.A., R.W.S., J. W. North, A.R.A., R.W.S., G. J. Pinwell, R.W.S., A. B. Houghton, A.R.W.S., Edward Duncan, R.W.S., Sir John Tenniel, R.I., J. D. Watson, R.W.S., W. P. Burton, R.W.S., G. Dodgson, R.W.S., Harrison Weir, R.I., F. W.

Topham, R.I., Birket Foster, R.W.S., William Small, John T. Reid, Frederick Sandys, J. Wolf, James Godwin, W. L. Leitch, George Cruikshank, Tom Morten, Simeon Solomon, Frederick Barnard, William Harvey, J. Lawson, Charles H. Bennett, Richard Doyle, Arthur Hughes, Arthur B. Frost, Thomas Dalziel, Edward, Dalziel, E. G. Dalziel, W. Holman Hunt, O.M., Ford Madox Brown, Sir J. Noel Paton, P.R.S.A., and Sir Edward Burne-Jones, Bart.

The collection forms a permanent exhibition at the Hampstead Central Public Library, situate in the Finchley Road, at the corner of Arkwright Road.

It is a 'bus ride of a few minutes only from the Swiss Cottage Station to the Hampstead Central Public Library.

The collection is now on view—from 9 a.m. till 10 p.m., on week days; and from 3 p.m. till 9 p.m., on Sundays. Admission free.

I would add that, in various parts of Hampstead, the Brothers Dalziel—George, Edward, John and Thomas—resided for many years.

I am, Sir, very faithfully yours,

GILBERT DALZIEL.

Dalkeith,
107, Fellows Road, N.W.

[We congratulate Hampstead on having received such a handsome gift from Mr. Dalziel. Probably no money could duplicate this collection of engraver's proofs from wood-cuts of the artists mentioned, the pick of the last half century or so. It is an exhibition of what are practically almost lost arts: the art of hand drawing on wood, work which is now done by photography on metal; and the art of hand engraving on wood which is now done by acid on zinc or copper.

The sight of a wood engraving of a drawing by Birket Foster, Harrison Weir, Small, Millais, Gilbert, &c., always brings to mind the late Mr. J. D. Cooper as he looked when examining an engraver's proof, with his spectacles pushed up to the middle of his forehead, and a twinkle in his eye as he manufactured one of those little puns he could never resist making. —ED.]

From Messrs. Alden & Co., Ltd.—"Indian Dust," by Otto Rothfield, B.A., F.R.G.S. (Indian Civil Service). A collection of very clever stories; old Indians would rejoice in them. One gives the reason of the practice amongst the Irish people of not letting anyone die in bed, but on the floor. It says, "Twice already had they lifted the old man from the bed to the floor that the soul should depart in peace, according to the law of the sacred books."

From Messrs. H. R. Allenson, Ltd.—"Little Sermons to the Children," by the Rev. R. C. Gillie, M.A. Mr. Gillie has the uncommon faculty of arousing the interest of children, no matter what subject he deals with. He understands the child-mind, and he never assumes the preaching manner.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, Bristol.—"Me and My True Love," by H. A. Mitchell Keays. Not very attractive for the first half of the story, then commences to become so, and in the end one is sorry that it has come to it; one can even read the last two chapters again—they are worth it. The heroine, an American lady of nineteen, questions if she shall marry a judge who is as old as her father, although she is in love with a young fellow about her own age. The judge says, when the day for their marriage is fixed, "You never have kissed me, you know." The young fellow appears on the scene, and "the boy held out his arms to the girl and she went to him like a dove to its cote." And later, "they kissed each other good-night for the hundredth time." Which of the two should she marry? Why, the boy of course, and she marries him. And there is a curious story of her mother—but the book must be read to know it.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black—"The Bruce," by John Barbour. Mr. W. M. Mackenzie, M.A., has made selections from Barbour's fine poem for use in schools. He has also provided an introduction, a section on early Scots grammar, &c., a number of excellent notes, and a glossary.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates.—"Christ, the Church, and Man," by His Eminence Cardinal Capecelatro, Archbishop of Capua. An essay on new methods in Ecclesiastical studies and worship, with some remarks on a new Apologia for Christianity in relation to the social question.

From The Cambridge University Press.—"The Sermons of Thomas Adams." Selected and edited by John Brown, D.D. Southey pronounced Adams to be the "prose Shakespeare of Puritan theologians." The little book before us contains twelve of his sermons choicely printed and bound.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—"A Daughter of the Storm," by Capt. Frank A. Shaw. An invigorating tale of the sea. The heroine, Aileen, is born in a fearful storm at sea; she passes through many adventures, and is thrown by chance into contact with Leigh, the hero. At one point of the story she calls him a coward, but in the light of after events she discovers her mistake. The book is interesting throughout and ends happily, nearly all the undesirable characters meeting timely ends and leaving the way clear for a happy union between hero and heroine.

From The Catholic Truth Society—"Sing Ye to the Lord," by Rev. R. Eaton. Devotional expositions of fifty Psalms, being the substance of sermons delivered at the Oratory at Edgbaston. They are likely to prove exceedingly helpful to members of the Roman Communion.

From the Same.—"The Roman Breviary," by Dom Jules Baudot. This short work on the Breviary, although, as Dom Baudot says, chiefly intended for the clergy, may be read with profit by the laity. It deals at some length with its sources and history, and it has been translated in the hope that English lay folk will learn to value more highly, and understand more clearly, the beauty, dignity, and antiquity of the Church's public liturgical prayer.

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—"A Manual for Free Church Ministers." Compiled by G. P. Gould, M.A., and J. H. Shakespeare, M.A. Contains an order of service for the solemnization of matrimony, the burial of the dead, the dedication of infants, and the baptism of believers. Suitable hymns for each of the services are added. "A Manual of the Order and Administration of a Baptist Church," by J. R. Wood and Samuel Chick. The design of the compilers has been to supply guidance, which has been tested in a sufficient number of instances to give it value; "in short, to provide a Chart which will enable Church officers to avoid shoals and quicksands, occasioning peril and loss."

From Messrs. Horace Cox & Co.—"The Yachting and Boating Annual," compiled and edited by M.I.N.A. This is the yachtsman's vade mecum, an exceedingly useful little book dealing with everything connected with yachts and yachting. It is neatly bound, and is a convenient size for the pocket.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—"The School of Madrid," by A. De Beruete Y. Moret. Perhaps the chief interest of this remarkable piece of art criticism for English readers lies in the author's estimate of three famous Velasquez in London. He unhesitatingly assigns the National Gallery "Admiral Pulido-Pareja" and the Devonshire House "The Lady with the Mantilla" to Velasquez' son-in-law, Juan del Mazo. He also throws doubts upon the authenticity of the Grosvenor House "Prince Balthazar Carlos." Senor De Beruete Y. Moret is the son of perhaps the greatest living authority upon Velasquez, and his book is a masterly piece of work. It includes not only a detailed study of Velasquez' most successful pupils, but also examples of their work, in some cases from photographs taken especially of pictures which have not hitherto been reproduced. The work of translation has been carefully and skilfully done from the author's original MS. by Mrs. Steuart Erskine.

From the Same.—"New Poems," by J. Marjoram. The most ambitious poem in this book is the Fantasy of the Sickbed, with its two characters—he, a sick man, she, a memory; scene, a sick room. For our part we prefer some of the shorter pieces, notably one or two reprinted from The Nation.

From the Same.—"Job and His New Theology," by Joseph Dawson. That the Rev. R. J. Campbell contributes an introductory letter commending Mr. Dawson's study of the Book of Job is a sufficient indication of the lines upon which it is written and the theological standpoint of its author. There is much in the perplexities felt by Job that still troubles us in these days, and this book is something much more than a commentary, it is nothing less than a study of the mind and character of Job as seen in the poem which we call "The Book of Job." Carlyle wrote of it: "A noble book: all men's book! It is our first, oldest statement of the never-ending problem—man's destiny and God's ways with him here on earth"—and we welcome Mr. Dawson's close and sympathetic and wise study upon the subject. The working man and woman whose way lies in the dusty highway of the world will find this a book to turn to in quiet moments. It breathes hope and ultimate victory—and we need often assurance and re-assurance in this direction.

From Messrs. Everett & Co—"The Charlatans," by Percy Shelley Bysshe. This is the sort of novel likely to be in demand at country circulating libraries. There is plenty of incident, two unconvincing but thorough-going villains, people of titled rank, and other attractions. It will not commend itself to the fastidious, who will experience something of a shock in finding a name so bound up with their literary affections allied to work of the calibre of "The Charlatans." The author is a descendant of the ancient family of Bysshe, and the Poet took his name from his grandmother, a daughter of Sir Roger Bysshe.

From Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, Ltd. (Bible Warehouse)—"The Book of the English Church Pageant," compiled by several hands under the editorship of Mr. C. R. Peers. This handsome and well-illustrated volume forms a worthy memento of the splendid pageant just concluded at Fulham. It is much more than a mere "Book of Words." Indeed, taken as a whole, with its introductory articles and comments on each scene, its colour prints and photographs of church architecture, music service books, &c., it provides a concise and impressive history of the great Church of England, which with all her defects still remains the noblest, as she is the most ancient, of our national institutions.

From Messrs. Gowans & Gray.—"Verses," by Edward Leigh. Simple songs, showing a love of nature and children and quiet joys. The author has a distinct gift of expression, and the little paper booklet is just of the kind to slip into one's pocket when starting for a day among green fields.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—"The Spitfire," by Edward Peple. Well written, with many good curious sayings—e.g., "Mary," he said on one occasion, "at twelve o'clock on Judgment Day I'll bet you'll sniff placidly and say, 'Dear me! I believe I smell smoke!'" There is a robbery of a large quantity of gems on board a yacht, dried beans being found in their place. The author cleverly does not disclose the thief until quite the end of the book.

From the Same.—"Moon of Valleys," by David Whitelaw. The indiscriminate reader of fiction is sometimes compelled to associate with strange people. Swindlers, drunkards and turf "sharks" meet him in Mr. Whitelaw's romance, and their company is at least entertaining; their conversation is racy, their actions unexpected and dramatic. The secret treasure, the chart, the race and scramble for the priceless jewel—these have on many occasions formed the fabric of exciting tales; but rarely have they been more cleverly exploited. There are a wonderfully pretty Jewess and the son of an Earl; a broken-down actor and a gentleman of Eastern origin; and a thief and a number of other picturesque characters. The book is full of incident, colour and excitement.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.—"Beautiful Flowers, and How to Grow Them," edited by Messrs. H. J. and W. P. Wright. The chief feature of this work is the colour prints of favourite garden flowers; these are excellently done, and most life-like in design and colouring. The general get-up of the book is more suitable for the drawing-room than for rough handling in the garden. Still, the accompanying letter-press is the work of skilled and practical gardeners; and the whole book (which is being published in seventeen shilling numbers) will be found a useful as well as highly attractive handbook for the gardening connoisseur.—"Wild Beasts of the World," from the same publishers, is a companion work, also being issued in shilling parts, with striking illustrations of wild creatures in their natural surroundings. It is edited by Mr. Frank Finn.

From Mr. John Lane.—"Sixpenny Pieces," by A. Neill Lyons. For anyone interested in the poor of the East End of London this clever work on the life of a doctor who administered to the sick at his house for sixpence and at their homes for one shilling is the book for them to read. It is very realistic, even to the conversation. If the reader does not mind a few "damns" and similar bad language he will meet with much that will interest him.

From Messrs. Libraco, Ltd.—"Library Economics." This is a thick pamphlet of 140 pages, comprising brief practical articles on details of library administration, written by members of public library staffs all over Great Britain. The most important contributions are: "Terms and phrases used in library work," by Wm. McGill (37 pages); "Bookbinding: orders and checking," and "Home Binderies," by H. T. Coutts. There are thirty-four other articles dealing with subjects ranging from "Book labelling" to "Literary Aids," and from "Children's rooms" to "Committee work." An interesting compilation useful to students of historical bibliography is G. A. Stephen's biographical list of "One hundred book collectors." Altogether a useful publication, collecting much hitherto scattered information.

From Messrs. E. Marlborough & Co.—"Persian Self Taught," by Hayk Hasan. This is No. 22 of Marlborough's Famous Self-Taught Series, and contains Alphabet and Pronunciation Vocabularies, Outline of Grammar, Conversations, Travel Talk, Commercial Trading Terms and Sentences, Persian Handwriting, Money, Weights and Measures. A most useful feature is the phonetic pronunciation, and the vocabularies, &c., are printed in Roman characters. This series is indispensable to all who travel or require a handy and reliable vocabulary.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—"Personæ of Ezra Pound." This little book of musical and thoroughly artistic verse is permeated by the author's close familiarity with the impersonal note existing in Provençal poetry. The volume is one to be read in a thoughtful mood by those to whom the value of a poem consists greatly in its poetic beauty and construction.

From Messrs. Maunsel & Co., Dublin.—"Insurrections," by James Stephens. The curiously sad note of the "Young Ireland" literature pervades this collection of ironic and often bitter verses. This is the work of one into whose soul the iron has entered, a singer of considerable gifts, who, we believe, may yet think out some solution of the problem of life less completely pessimistic.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Ltd.—"R. C. Morgan: His Life and Times," by George E. Morgan, M.A. With Introduction by Rt. Hon. Lord Kinnaird. The late Mr. R. Cope Morgan, founder and editor of The Christian, and head of the publishing firm of Messrs. Morgan and Scott, occupied a unique position in modern journalism. An important section of this admirable biography deals with the religious awakening of 1859, in which movement Mr. Morgan was at once chronicler, crusader, and organiser. The more personal chapters afford delightful glimpses of the inner life of one who, while largely governed by mystic conceptions, was obsessed by a desire to aid every soul upon whom rested any shadow of spiritual darkness. As a faithful presentation of men and manners in the later Victorian period, and on into Edwardian days, the book will be widely welcomed; it includes four photogravures and other choice illustrations, and great taste has been expended upon its preparation.

From The New Age Press, Ltd.—"On Certain Fundamentals," by Captain Sir Francis Vane. Essays on current politics: the House of Lords, land and social reform, the coloured races of the Empire, feudal Socialism, and so on. The papers are very short, the style is terse and direct, and the opinions set down are rather advanced.

From Mr. David Nutt.—"Anglo-German Song-Book," a collection of English and American Popular Songs (Original Text), rendered in parallel versions, by Emil Henry Leibius, late Secretary to H. Britt Maj. Consulate and Hon. President of the Anglia Literary Club, Stuttgart. In this handy and compact little volume are to be found gems of patriotic, sentimental, and folk song, from the works of past masters of the art of song writing. A word of praise is due to the compiler and publisher for their efforts to obtain a wider audience for compositions that are so full of memories in both lands.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.—"Hungarian Grammar," by C. Arthur and Ilona Ginever. The authors aver that Hungarian is not a difficult language to learn; "the impression that it is a hard language must be regarded as due to the bad and complicated exposition usually met with in Hungarian grammars." Certainly, they have arranged their own grammar both simply and logically. Though it contains only one hundred pages, a student who thoroughly masters it will be well on the way to speaking and reading Hungarian. A vocabulary and a number of phrases in common use have been added.

From Messrs. Stanley Paul & Co.—"The Secret Terror," by "Brenda." The secret that hangs over Reine Claveryng like a cloud is soon guessed by the reader, though it is skilfully concealed from most of the characters in the story. Reine, the beautiful, witty and gay, falls a victim to alcohol; her health suffers, she is driven to all kinds of petty subterfuge, and her life is made one unending misery. But the interest of the tale does not centre only in Reine; Harriet Sorby, a plain, simple-minded but golden-hearted girl, also claims attention, for her character is drawn with great art, and no little beauty of feeling. The novel is of the leisurely, old-fashioned order, but it has many dramatic and arresting moments.

From Messrs. W. Rider & Sons, Ltd.,—"How To Rest and Be Restful." Practical suggestions for a restful way of living, and to show the intimate connection between body, mind—or soul—and spirit. The hope that many more may benefit by these suggestions, as many have already benefited, induced the author, Grace Dawson, to bring out this little book at a price easily within the reach of all.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—"The English Woman: Studies in her Psychic Evolution," by David Staars. Translated from the French, and abridged by J. M. E. Brownlow. Mr. Staars' brilliant study of the evolution of woman in this country is a book to possess, for it will bear reading more than once. After a brief analysis of "The English Mind," he reviews the position of women in the Eighteenth Century, and follows this by a consideration of the part played by three individuals in psychic evolution—Harriet Martineau, George Eliot, and Frances Power Cobbe. The next section is devoted to the beginnings of the woman movement, and the book closes with a review of the position of woman at the present time. Mr. Staars is a close and sympathetic observer, and his estimate of the trend of national life in our country is just and true. Incidentally he touches on many subjects, religion, politics, family life, education, &c. The book has been excellently translated.

From the Same.—"A Three-foot Stool," by Peter Wright. To anybody who has lived a ranch life this book will be an enjoyable one. The author, too, bursts occasionally into poetry, and his verses are of no mean order.

From the Same.—"The Wooden Horse," by Hugh Walpole. We believe there are many quarrelsome families in this country, and to them we can thoroughly recommend this book. Perhaps the author wrote it for them with the idea of showing how much better it is to behave pleasantly.

From Messrs. Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—"The Girls' School Year Book (Public Schools for 1909)." This is the fourth year of issue of this useful publication, which gives details of all the public schools for girls with illustrations in many instances. A list of secondary schools is included, with a good index.

From the Same.—"The Adoption of Rhodope," by Thomas Pinkerton. There is much that is beautiful in this record of the search for Beulah by a boy of eleven and a girl of ten. Brought up in foul surroundings, ill-educated, accustomed to taunts and sneers, they decide to run away to the beautiful land of which they had read. They sleep in the open, and their dog protects them and brings them food. Their adventures are many, but they reach safety at last. The story is in parts beautifully wrought, and full of tenderness; unfortunately, it is not quite true to human nature, and on that account the sense of reality is destroyed.

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—"Balkania: a Short History of the Balkan States," by W. Howard-Flanders. The mixture of races, the geographical features of the Balkan States, and the difficulties of religion—it is to these that the author attributes the unrest and dissatisfaction that exists in the population. He gives an account of the Bulgarian supremacy from B.C. 521 down to A.D. 1015, of the Serbian supremacy from 1140 to 1396, of the the Turkish supremacy from 1405 to the time of the revolt against it at the end of the Eighteenth Century, and the latter part of the book is devoted to the story of the liberation of Balkania and the present condition of affairs there. All this is compressed into a hundred pages, and yet an excellent coup d'oeil is given of the whole.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—"The Dawn, and other Poems," by Douglas Carswell. The chief item in this slim volume from a new writer is a realistic and dramatic study of a poet whose belated success leads to a tragic close. Most of the remaining verses are of a retrospective cast, possessing lyrical charm, and power of sympathetic description.

From the Same.—"World-Music, and other Poems," by Frederick John Webb. These poems testify to their author's command of language and imagery, for the poetic presentation of the serious aspects of life, and also nature's changing hues. We select "The Lament of Pan," "The Victor," and "The End of the Day," as convincing examples of his merits.

From Mr. Chas. J. Thynne.—"At Home," by the Rev. John S. Nye. Six short addresses on family religion in cottage homes; sensible and thoughtful.

From Messrs. A. Treherne & Co., Ltd.—"A. C. Maclaren (Captain All England, 1909) on Cricket." A very interesting little handbook, which should prove useful to the budding cricketer. It is illustrated with photographs of the author, C. B. Fry and the Hon. F. S. Jackson. The chapter "Three-Day Test Matches" is of particular interest, as it deals with a subject which has been considerably discussed of late.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co,. Ltd.—"The Powers of Mischief," by Sir William Magnay. This is a book that lacks none of the arts of the novelist to make it convincing; though some of the incidents are unlikely and farcical enough, they are presented so cleverly as to appear real and necessary parts of a dramatic and exciting plot. The four Fitzralphs are the remaining scions of an ancient and formerly wealthy family. But they are vulgar, foolish and ill-bred young men, and they seek entrance into Marpham Castle, the residence of an uncle of their half-brother's, by fair means and foul. Two of them, disguised as artists, obtain the good opinion of John Henry Baslow, the wealthy owner of Marpham Castle, and have a brief but inglorious career there. Staying at the Castle are several scheming villains whose plots and plans are sufficiently extraordinary, and a hollow yew-tree communicating with a secret passage plays its part in the development of the story. There is no lack of incident, and the character drawing is skilful.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—"The Genesis and Evolution of the Individual Soul, Scientifically Treated; including also Problems relating to Science and Immortality," by the Rev. J. O. Bevan, F.S.A. The author attempts to construct a consistent theory for the origin and development of the individual soul based upon scientific knowledge, though he holds that the subject transcends science and compels him to turn to philosophy for its complete solution. He speculates upon the union "of two soul-elements constituting the soul of the child that is to be," that which links it, through its parents, with a long chain of ancestors. The last part of the book is devoted to the probable environment and progress of the soul after death, "continual ascent" being held out to us as consistent with our present knowledge of life in general. The book deserves, and requires, very close study.

Some Cheap Editions and New Books.—"The Primrose Path," by Mrs. Oliphant (Nelson's Sevenpenny Cloth Series); "The Monastery," by Sir Walter Scott (Nelson's); "Bernard Shaw," by Holbrook Jackson, and "The Earthquake," by W. Holt White (Grant Richards' Shilling Net Series); Guy Thorne's, "An Officer, and a Gentleman" (C. H. White); "The Hard Way," by a Peer (J. Long); "The Wild Widow," by Gertie De S. Wentworth James, and "2835 Mayfair," by Frank Richardson (Werner Laurie's Shilling Net Series); "The Lovely Malincourt," by Helen Mathers, and "The Mystery of Landy Court," by Fergus Hume (Jarrold's Sixpenny Series); "The Spell of the Jungle," by Alice Perrin (S. Paul & Co.'s Shilling Net Fiction); "The Woman Pays," by Sydney Warwick (R. E. King & Co., Ltd.); "A Stroke of Luck," by Nat Gould (Long); "Diana of the Crossway," by George Meredith, and "The Old Dominion," by Mary Johnston (A. Constable & Co.); "Paul Farquhar's Legacy: a Tale of the Rand Mines," by J. G. Rowe (Sealy Bryers & Walker).

BEAUTIFUL SHOW CARDS
And illustrated prospectuses Sent FREE per usual Carrier.
In order to introduce the series the publishers will enclose in above parcel one copy of "A PROFESSIONAL RIDER" ready this week, in exchange for six stamps.

"The International Publisher and Bookseller" says:—

"This admirable new series, which we recommended in our last issue, has caught the public fancy. By the courtesy of the publishers we have been permitted to inspect some of the forthcoming volumes. We were much struck by their attractive and artistic appearance, each cover being printed in four colours. The books are well printed on the best antique wove paper from clear, readable type."

THE WIDOW—TO SAY NOTHING OF THE MAN. HELEN ROWLAND.
With 8 original full-page illustrations. [3rd Edition.
Nothing but praise from the press for this very humorous novel written in the "Dolly Dialogue" style.
The Daily Mail, in devoting nearly half a page to noticing this book, says:—"'The Dolly Dialogue' style. A very amusing volume, which should find many readers."
The Bedford Guardian says:—"The dialogue sparkles with wit, wisdom, and abounds with brilliant repartee."

THE SPELL OF THE JUNGLE. ALICE PERRIN.
Author of "The Waters of Destruction," "Idolatry' (third edition), etc.
Saturday Review says:—"Full of picturesque adventure and interesting local colour."
The Times, in reviewing Mrs. Perrin's last novel, says:—"In book after book she has drawn vivid, incisive sketches of not only Anglo-Indian but native life. . . . a real triumph."

THE SINS OF SOCIETY. CECIL RALEIGH.
A novel adapted from the celebrated melodrama of Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton—which is touring the world—and published for the first time at a popular price (Vol. I. of the "Drury Lane Novels").

THE MARRIAGES OF MAYFAIR. E. KEBLE CHATTERTON.
Authorised adaptation in novel form of this exciting Drury Lane melodrama of Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, now touring in most parts of the world (Vol. II. of the "Drury Lane Novels").

A TEN POUND PENALTY. H. NOEL WILLIAMS.
Author of "Five Fair Sisters," "The Hand of Leonore," etc.
A stirring tale of the turf, by an author who has already won fame by his recent finely written books.
The Aberdeen Free Press says:—"The racing scenes are full of go, and bring back to memory long-forgotten stories of Whyte Melville and Hawley Smart."
The Saturday Review says:—"The descriptions of races, racing folk and racing talk are lifelike and interesting."

PRIESTS OF PROGRESS. G. COLMORE. [Next week
Author of "The Angel and the Outcast," etc.
A novel which has startled London by the lurid light it has cast on certain "Sins of the spirit."
The Spectator says: "The book is powerfully written, and its subject demands attention."
The Daily Chronicle says:—"A clever, powerful book."

THOROUGHBRED. FRANCIS DODSWORTH. Author of "The Spendthrift," etc. "A very breezy sporting novel."

GAY LAWLESS. HELEN MATHERS. Author of "Comin' thro' the Rye," "Love the Thief," &c.
A popular edition of a novel which has passed through several editions in a more expensive form, and one of the best reviewed novels of last autumn. Their Majesties the King and Queen have been graciously pleased to accept copies of this exciting romance.

A PROFESSIONAL RIDER. Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD. [This week.
A well-written sporting romance by this well-known sporting writer.

BROTHER ROGUE AND BROTHER SAINT. TOM GALLON. Author of "The Dream—and the Woman," &c.
An entirely new long novel issued in the first instance at a popular price.

THE DEATH GAMBLE. GEO. R. SIMS. Author of "The Devil in London," &c.
Since Mr. Sims issued his masterpiece, "The Black Stain," no more powerful book has come from the pen of this versatile writer. This work of absorbing interest tells, with characteristic vigour and dramatic instinct, of the gambling in human lives which all the power of the law has been unable to separate from the blessings of the life insurance system.
Extract from the Author's Preface:—"More thrilling than the theatre, far stranger than fiction, more enthralling than romance, are the dramas of life and death that have come to their last act in the dread chamber wherein England hangs the sword of justice, and on the Continent the crucified Saviour of the world."

THE DEVIL IN LONDON. GEO. R. SIMS. Author of "The Death Gamble," &c. [3rd Edition.
Being striking phases of London Life by Night and Day.
The British Weekly (in a full page review) says:—"There is perhaps no man living who knows London so well as Mr. Sims, no man has pictured the dark sides of life so effectively, and yet with so much reticence. . . . he never fails to hold his audience. . . . sure to be very widely read.
T. P.'s Weekly says:—"The vices and horrors of a corrupt society exposed."

The Foundations of the Origin of Species.
Two Essays written in 1842 and 1844 by CHARLES DARWIN. Edited by his son, Francis Darwin.

The first of the two essays here printed under the title The Foundations of the Origin of Species, was written by Charles Darwin in June, 1842, but the manuscript only came to light in 1896, when it was found among his papers. Although written, seventeen years before the publication of The Origin of Species, as a brief abstract only of his theory, it is remarkable that it gave in about thirty-five pages so full an outline of his future work. It was enlarged during the summer of 1844 into one of two hundred and thirty pages, which constitutes the second essay in the book.

The essays are preceded by a full introduction by his son Francis Darwin, and the volume contains also a portrait of Charles Darwin taken in 1854, and a facsimile of a paragraph in the manuscript of 1842.

The Rede Lecture was this year included in the proceedings of the Darwin Centenary Celebration. Sir Archibald Geikie, by whom it was given, took for his theme the relation of Darwin's studies in geology to the great problems of evolution, giving at the same time an outline of what Darwin accomplished in that science. The Lecture, with twenty-seven pages of notes, is now ready in book form.

The Recent Congress

FROM the expressions we heard on all sides, we feel confident in stating that the visitors to the recent Congress of Booksellers had an extremely pleasant time. Many were loud in their praise of the excellence of the arrangements which had been made for their entertainment by the Committee of the London Branch of the Booksellers' Association, by the Publishers' Association, by Messrs. Simpkin, and by Messrs. Dent and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son. There can be no doubt that the London Congress has been a great success, and will long be remembered by all who took part in it.

One of the most interesting statements made at the great banquet, presided over by Mr. Joseph Truslove, was by the President of the Publishers' Association, Mr. William Heinemann, who, in replying to the toast of "The Publishers' Association," which had been so ably proposed by Mr. Maclehose, said that since the establishment of the net book system the book trade had improved in England. The Publishers' Association prided itself upon the fact that it had—with the co-operation of the Associated Booksellers—been able to establish a system which he hoped some day would be universal.

The hope expressed by Mr. Heinemann must, we feel sure, be entertained by all who have the best interests of the bookselling trade at heart. All books to be published at net prices is the ideal to which we should all look, and all do our best to bring about.

Mr. Heinemann certainly hit a prominent nail on the head when he pointed out that one thing which had damaged the reputation of the six-shilling novel was that books had been spun out to bulk within covers at six shillings. It was said that, whereas in the past twenty-five per cent. of all six-shilling novels published were sold to the circulating libraries and seventy-five per cent. through the booksellers, to-day the ratio was reversed. If they wished to revert to the old proportion of twenty-five per cent. to the libraries and seventy-five per cent. to the booksellers, the publication of the novel must be more economically honest than it was at present. He believed that the most likely steps towards the change were the adoption of a net price for novels, a differentiation in the price of long and short novels, and, most of all, a close co-operation between authors, publishers, and booksellers to see that in quantity, as well as in quality, the books offered to the public represented value for money. There were some who advocated raising the price on first publication—a circulating library edition to be followed by a bookshop edition—but the general tendency of the day lay towards cheapening everything, books included. Probably there was no other course open to them than to reduce the price of novels and to hope for increased sales.

We are glad to see that Mr. Heinemann did not lay the blame for decrease in sales of six-shilling novels on the sevenpenny cloth edition. To prove that charge would be exceedingly difficult. For one thing you would have to prove that the public had given up buying six shilling novels to a large extent, and it seems to us that it would be difficult to prove that they ever bought those editions to a large extent, except in the case of a few very popular authors, whose sales have been unaffected.

One of the best results of these congresses was pointed out by Mr. John Murray in an excellent speech, which was heard in all parts of the great room, viz., that they helped in that breaking down of those barriers which used to stand between authors, publishers, and booksellers.

We are glad to find that Mr. H. W. Keay, the President of the Associated Booksellers, referred again to the advice and assistance they had received from the President of the Publishers' Association, when they were first endeavouring to get the book trade to unite.

In our issue last week we gave portraits of some of the original founders of the Booksellers' Association, and we give this week portraits of some of those who took part prominently in the recent Congress, with our report of what was generally voted a most successful meeting. Fortunately the weather was quite favourable.

Our Supplement

WE have much pleasure in presenting to our readers as a Supplement to this issue a photograph of the Banquet to the Associated Booksellers at the Hotel Cecil on Saturday, June 19th, 1909. It was taken by Messrs. Fradelle & Young.

Notes and Announcements

OUR hearty acknowledgments are due to Mr. G. H. Whitaker, of The Bookseller, and Mr. G. F. Goulder, of The Newsagent and Booksellers' Review, for reports of some of the speeches at the recent Congress. We had arranged with our regular reporters for a full report, but by what they describe as "gross negligence" in their office they did not attend to it, and but for the courtesy of our confrères our report would have been very imperfect.

Mr. W. L. Courtney has an admirable and appreciative criticism of the work of George Sand in The Daily Telegraph of June 23rd. Referring to her style, he says: "To us in England hardly any style appears so full of easy and natural perfection. It runs along without an effort; with a graceful rhythm of its own, often a little slowly, but with the certainty and the volume of a stately river. Like Wordsworth, she loves the poor and the humble, in the midst of whom she made her home. There is music in her sentences—as Thackeray declared, "the music of country bells falling sweetly and sadly on the ear." George Sand held the secret of eternal youth, as she makes one of her humble characters say to another in the midst of overwhelming misfortunes, 'Il faut continuer d'avoir du courage.'"

The second volume of "A New History of Painting in Italy," by J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle, edited and supplemented with notes by Edward Hutton, will be issued immediately by Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. This second volume deals with the Sienese School and the first part of the Florentine School, and will be followed in the autumn by Volume 3, completing the work.

Mr. Dion Calthrop's new novel, "Everybody's Secret," is announced by Mr. Alston Rivers for publication on July 7th.

Mr. Murray will publish in the early autumn the latest addition to the Military Student's Library—a translation by a British officer (Lieutenant K. B. Ferguson) of General Von Horsetzky's work, "A Short History of the Chief Campaigns in Europe since 1792," which has been described authoritatively as a "splendid epitome of European fighting." General Von Horsetzky is one of the first soldiers in the Austro-Hungarian Army.

The Earl of Rosebery has written an interesting Preface to the volume of "Recollections of a Long Life," by John Cam Hobhouse, afterwards Lord Broughton, which Mr. Murray is publishing next week. Hobhouse, as the reading world well knows, was one of the most loyal of Byron's many friends, and tells in these revealing volumes a great deal which lovers of the poet will be glad to know. He was a man of many interests and activities, being politician, author, traveller and a prominent figure in society. His Recollections, now for the first time given to the public, reflect the times in which he lived in a particularly brilliant and vivid manner. He was a great admirer of Napoleon, and has many anecdotes to tell about the Emperor and other famous and historic persons of his day.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the efforts to promote a friendly feeling between Great Britain and Germany will be successful. Mr. Arthur Spurgeon was invited by the Berlin committee to be one of the delegates at the recent Conference at Berlin to promote good feeling between the two countries. On June 14th the delegates were received by the Emperor at Potsdam, the reception lasting more than half an hour. The Empress was also present, and engaged in conversation with several of the delegates, who had good reason to be pleased with the cordiality displayed by their Imperial and Royal Highnesses, and, in fact, by their reception generally.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., announce the addition of another volume to their Makers of National History Series, which the Rev. W. H. Hutton is editing for them. The new work is "General Wolfe," by Mr. Edward Salmon. It was quite time that a Life of Wolfe should be written, with the knowledge now available through the discovery of letters and other documents, and a fitting occasion seems to be the forthcoming celebration in September of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the capture of Quebec. It was time also that the positive errors which are to be found in the accounts of Wolfe's career should be corrected.

A new revised and cheaper edition of "Pitman's Mercantile Law," by J. A. Slater, B.A., LL.B. (Lond.), will be published on July 1st by Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.

Miss Gertrude Page's new South African story, entitled "The Silent Rancher," will be published very shortly by Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.

Mr. Heinemann announces for publication early in July, a new novel by Bram Stoker, entitled "The Lady of the Shroud." This is a thrilling romance written in the vein of "Dracula," Mr. Stoker's greatest success.

Mr. John Long will shortly publish a work entitled "The Secret History of the Court of Spain, 1802–1906," by Miss Rachel Challice. This history of Spanish Court life in the past century is entirely from Spanish sources, and therefore it gives a new insight to many subjects which have hitherto only been seen from an English or French point of view. The work will contain rare historical illustrations and special copyright portraits of Court celebrities of Spain.

A book dealing with that wonderful all-but-octogenarian, His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Austria, is just about to be issued by Mr. John Long. The author is the well known French writer, M. Henri de Weindel, a partner in the Paris publishing firm of Félix Juven, and the translator is Mr. Philip W. Sergeant. Intending readers of "The Real Francis Joseph" may "expect some very piquant extracts from the history of the Viennese Court."

Mr. John Lane will publish on July 2nd "The Isle of Man," by Agnes Herbert, author of "Two Dianas in Somaliland," &c.; with thirty-two full-page illustrations in colour by Donald Maxwell.

Mr. George F. Chambers, the author of "A Handbook of Astronomy," has simply told for general readers "The Story of the Comets," which the Oxford University Press will publish shortly.

A brief study in the medicine of history is announced by the Oxford University Press. It is entitled "The Last Days of Charles II." and the primary object of the author, Dr. Raymond Crawfurd, has been to establish the true cause of the monarch's death, which other historians have stated to be apoplexy.

"The Rhodian Sea-Law," edited from the manuscripts by Mr. Walter Ashburner (Oxford University Press), is on the eve of publication. A new edition having been long demanded, Mr. Ashburner has prepared this volume, and has supplied it with a very full critical apparatus, all the material variants being given, together with a translation and commentary.

Racehorses are not the only kind of horses in which Royalty is interested, for the Prince of Wales has become a subscriber to a great work on hunting, which is on the eve of publication by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd. The title of the book is "British Hunting," and every effort has been made to make it the most elaborate and comprehensive work upon the subject. More than a thousand illustrations will be added to the letterpress.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish on June 28th a book on "Country Residences in Europe and America," by Mr. L. V. Le Moyne. Its purpose is to describe the most interesting country residences of Italy, France, England, and America.

There has hitherto been no cheap edition of the plays of Robert Greene. Students of the Elizabethan drama will, therefore, no doubt be glad to learn that Mr. Unwin is including in his handy "Mermaid Series," a complete collection of the plays in one volume. The editor is Mr. Thomas H. Dickinson, of the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. Unwin is publishing a new edition of the "Maps of the Dauphiny Alps," which form a sort of extra volume in the "Climber's Guides" series, edited by Sir Martin Conway and the Rev. W. A. B. Coolidge.

On June 28th Mr. Unwin will add to his shilling "Sociology Series" a new impression of "Women's Work and Wages," by Messrs. Edward Cadbury, M. C. Matheson, and George Shann. It is an elaborate study, of great value to social workers.

"Through Uganda to Mount Elgon" is the title of a book of travel by the Rev. J. B. Purvis, which Mr. Unwin will publish on June 28th. The author takes his readers through almost the whole of our East African Empire, and gives glimpses of countries and peoples some of which have hitherto been but casually mentioned.

Mr. Unwin is publishing on June 28th, a work by Mr. James Westfall Thomson, on "The Wars of Religion in France: The Huguenots, Catherine de Medici, and Philip the Second." The volume, representing nearly seven years of study, including two prolonged visits to France, is based upon a careful examination of original sources, and contains a valuable appendix of hitherto unpublished documents from the archives of Paris and London.

The Rev. A. N. Cooper ("the Walking Parson") has just completed a new book, "A Tramp's Schooling," which will be published on June 28th by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. Mr. Cooper has walked across every country in Europe, except three, and for more than twenty years has been seeing the world from the point of view of a man on the road.

In his new novel, "A Change in the Cabinet," which Messrs. Methuen publish, Mr. Hilaire Belloc, M.P., resumes his ironical methods, and tells a diverting story of political jobbery. Among his characters is a Cabinet Minister, who is struck with a disease that compels him to tell the truth to everybody, and on all occasions, which he continues to do until he is mercifully healed.

During a journey along untrodden byways of Portugal, Mr. Ernest Oldmeadow heard from the lips of an old priest a remarkable story of a young monk who was turned adrift by the Law of 1834 suppressing the Portuguese monasteries. Upon this foundation of fact Mr. Oldmeadow has built a superstructure of fiction, with an English heroine. There have been many romances in which a monk or a nun is the central figure, but it is claimed that "Antonio" (for such is the name of Mr. Oldmeadow's novel) differs markedly from them all. The scenes are laid partly in Early Victorian England and partly in Portugal during the troubled reign of Queen Maria da Gloria. Mr. Grant Richards publishes this original and entertaining work.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish in the course of a few days "Multitude and Solitude," a new novel by Mr. John Masefield, author of "Captain Margaret." In this book the author endeavours to treat the problem which presents itself to the artistic temperament in a generation whose inspiration is scientific rather than artistic. "Captain Margaret" was romantic and of a past day; "Multitude and Solitude" is actual and of the present.

Mr. Grant Richards is publishing shortly "Spain: a Study of Her Life and Arts," by Royall Tylor. The author in his preface says, "The object of this book is to give some account of the various schools of art which are represented by existing monuments in Spain, and of the manner of their adoption."

"Europe in Renaissance and Reformation," by Miss M. A. Hollings, M.A., is a volume of Messrs. Methuen's series, "Six Ages of European History." This work is intended as an introduction to the study of mediæval history, and as a text-book for the use of schools, principally for the fourth, fifth, and sixth forms. It is well illustrated with maps.

Messrs. Methuen's series of "Little Guides" is becoming well known to all who love the country. A new volume is about to be added dealing with "Essex," and Dr. J. Charles Cox, the well-known antiquarian, is the author. There are numerous illustrations and two maps.

Messrs. Methuen published on June 24th, Mr. H. Inigo Triggs' new book, "Town Planning: Past, Present, and Future." Until recently this subject has been ignored in this country, and the structure of our towns, the development of our suburbs, and the creation of entirely new districts have been nearly always a pure matter of chance. The new Town Planning Bill will draw attention to the necessity of dealing with such an important matter in a more far-sighted manner. There are 170 illustrations in the book, including many plans.

Mr. Werner Laurie has two new novels nearly ready: "The Forbidden Theatre," by Keighley Snowden (author of "The Life Class"), and "The Butler's Story," by Arthur Train. Mr. Snowden's story describes a fight for a theatre among the residents of a small Yorkshire town. Mr. Arthur Train, who has hitherto been known as a writer on criminology, has in "The Butler's Story" written his first work of fiction. The tale concerns the social, financial and sentimental adventures of a respectable English butler in a very new and rich American family.

"A Little Tour in India," by Beatrice Rundle, will shortly be issued by Mr. Werner Laurie. Miss Rundle gives an account of her impressions in a winter holiday recently spent in India, and illustrates her book with a large number of photographs.

Miss Gertrude Robins, the well-known actress, is publishing with Mr. Werner Laurie a volume of short plays, under the title "Makeshifts."

After an interval of some six years a new story by Mr. James Lane Allen will be published in July by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., under the title, "The Bride of the Mistletoe." The scenes are laid in Kentucky, the country which has provided the background of Mr. Allen's earlier most successful works.

Messrs. W. Nicholson & Son, Paternoster Square, E.C., will shortly publish at 1s., "Her Father's Crime," by George Bruce, which had a successful run in the People newspaper a little while ago.

Morice Gerard's new serial story, commencing in the July number of The Quiver, entitled "The League of Life," depicts slumdom in its squalor and misery, a millionaire factory-owner, and a mysterious "League," the founder of which, an equally mysterious doctor, is attracted by the rich man's daughter.

Messrs. Gowans & Gray, Ltd., have just published in their admirable sixpenny net series "Die Hundert Besten Gedichte (Lyrik) der deutschen Sprache." The majority of these poems refer to the beauties of nature. No people have a more enthusiastic love of hill, dell, woodland, stream and mountain than our friends the Germans, nor are any more attached to home and country.

"Light Lines and Tight Lines" is the title of a new humorous work on the subject of angling, by W. Carter Platts, promised by Messrs. Jarrold & Sons. The author, who has achieved for himself a reputation as a humorist, is a well-known writer on angling matters, and blends with these characteristics that of a nature photographer. The work will contain sixteen excellent photographs by the author.

Messrs. George Allen & Sons have nearly ready "Our Island Church, Sketches from the History of English Church and State," by Douglas Macleane, M.A. These essay-sketches centre round the events represented in the Church Pageant of this summer.

The Sale Hill Studio has compiled a catalogue of decorative initial letters and borders, designed to enable the progressive printer to quickly and economically produce refined and dignified work. This catalogue is neatly got up and is worth attention.

It is a pity Mr. C. K. Shorter is so unkind in his remarks about the Baconians—it sets a bad example; now the Globe has gone and called Mark Twain "a buffoon" because he earnestly disbelieves in W.S. Mr. Shorter says the Baconians are "crude." Surely crude is not a word one can apply to all who doubt W.S. was the author of Hamlet, including Lord Byron, Disraeli, O. W. Holmes, Emerson, John Bright, Bismarck Lord Penzance, and—Mark Twain. Of course, we admit it is a bit difficult not to feel righteous indignation with people who claim that Bacon was not only Shakespeare, but also Spenser, Marlowe, Ben Jonson, and all the other "singing birds" of the time. As the Edinburgh Weekly Dispatch says, "Rather than be tormented any longer with this vexatious theme, let us admit at once that Bacon wrote everything that was printed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth," and of James also for that matter. But the Baconians, of course, repudiate all this promiscuous distribution of Bacon's brains.

Messrs. Luzac & Co. will shortly publish a small volume on Islam, "Her Moral and Spiritual Value," written by Major A. G. Leonard, to which the well-known Moslem and distinguished writer on Islam and Mohammedan Law, Syed Ameer Ali, M.A., C.I.E., has written a foreword. Major Leonard has dealt with the subject in the broadest spirit of a sympathy and knowledge born of intimate association with races and people who are Moslems. He dispels the absurdity and hollowness of the Pan-Islamic bogey.

Mr. Heinemann will publish shortly a new book by E. F. Benson, entitled "A Reaping." In this volume Mr. Benson departs from the novel of modern life, and returns to the manner of "The Book of Months," which received such exceptionally favourable criticisms on its publication some years ago.

Messrs. Heffer hope to publish in the early autumn an edition of the "Symposium of Plato," by Mr. R. G. Bury. As the first annotated edition of this brilliant dialogue produced in England, this work should prove of special interest to classical students. It will contain a revised text in which, for the first time, account will be taken of the recently-discovered Papyrus fragment: the commentary will deal more especially with the literary and philosophical aspects of the dialogue.

GAY & HANCOCK'S ADVT.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN, at the Banquet given by the Associated Booksellers (London Branch), emphasized the fact that the public wished to be assured that they were receiving value for money.

G. & H. assert that they undoubtedly have it in this new Edition of the Penelope volumes.

G. & H. believe that they are correct in asserting that the illustrations to these volumes are some of Mr. C. E. Brock's best work. They know that he specially went over the whole ground and did his work con amore.

G. & H. anticipate selling 100,000 copies of these Volumes

Mr. JUSTICE DARLING at this Banquet asked, Who was to be the Judge of what was Literature?

G. & H. consider the Bookseller who is interested in his profession to be a reliable judge.

G. & H. give the following Extracts from the Press to assist him:—

Glasgow Herald.—"The best picture of Scottish manners and customs ever penned by an alien hand . . . so genial and jolly a book about Scotland is seldom written."

Graphic.—"She is what is always and everywhere rare—a real humorist."

Times.—"It is pleasant to meet with an American lady writer so cultivated in style, so susceptible to enthusiasm, and so capable of seasoning her enthusiasm with quiet humour."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Mrs. Wiggin has a fund of genuine and refined humour that is simply irresistible."

Literary World.—"The reader is kept entertained in the brightest fashion throughout. . . . A true humorist."

Methodist Times.—"The most charming holiday books possible."

Daily Telegraph.—"Always a pleasure to read Mrs. Wiggin's books."

Manchester Courier.—"Amusing in the extreme . . . perfectly delicious."

Dundee Advertiser.—"Here is a book to buy (Scotland), and to give hearty thanks for."

Spectator.—"Penelope keeps us continually amused . . . sure of a hearty welcome.

London: GAY & HANCOCK, Ltd., 12 & 13, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden

Mr. Hammond Hall, late editor of The Daily Graphic, has accepted the editorship of Hazell's Annual, in succession to Mr. William Palmer, who, after seventeen years' service, has resigned in order to devote himself entirely to his work as managing director of the Bedfordshire Times Publishing Company, Ltd., and editor of The Bedfordshire Times.

Mr. R. B. Henderson, Assistant-Master at Rugby School, has written an Introduction to the study of Moths and Butterflies for the Rugby School Natural History Society, entitled "The Scaly-Winged." It will be published immediately by Messrs. Christophers.

Mr. Horace Cox has pleasure in announcing the publication early in July of an important and valuable work. Captain C. H. Stigand, who, with the co-operation of Mr. D. D. Lyell, has earned the gratitude of all big game hunters by his admirable book, "Central African Game and its Spoor," is about to present another volume of no less practical value on the Game of British East Africa. It presents special features which will appeal to all true sportsmen, for it is no record of mere slaughter, but the impressions of a hunter who is at the same time an ardent field naturalist.

With the American Battle Fleet Around the World

TWENTY thousand miles without an accident was the unparalleled feat of the U.S. battleship fleet on the recent cruise. The voyage created a world-wide interest and a most intense national pride. An accurate photographic record of this now famous cruise is of the greatest interest, and A. C. McClurg & Co., of Chicago, consider themselves fortunate in obtaining such a record for publication. Under the title "A Pictorial Log of the Battle Fleet Cruise Around the World," Chief Turret-Captain R. J. Miller and H. R. Jackson, official photographer of the fleet, have produced a notable work that will be recognised immediately as the standard account of the great naval venture. As its title implies, the work is arranged as a log. On the one side of the open book are the plates, 7 by 5¼ ins., and opposite them is a dated record of the places and events which they illustrate. There are between four and five hundred illustrations, covering the ships, the ports visited, the havoc of the Messina earthquake, the excitements of bull-fighting, the pyramids, target practice, and a number of views in the frozen south.

As an ideal magazine for holiday reading the Storyteller is in the front rank, and the August number, published July 3rd, is even better than its predecessors. Richard Marsh, Robert Barr, Mrs. Baillie Reynolds, Keble Howard, Captain Frank H. Shaw, and Alice Maud Meadows are a few of the popular authors who contribute complete short stories, and there is a long complete novel, "The Yellow Woman," by Randolph Lichfield.

Autobiography of Sir Henry M. Stanley

IN the early autumn will appear the "Autobiography of Sir Henry M. Stanley," the great explorer, edited by his wife, and published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., of 100, Southwark Street, S.E., and 32, Warwick Lane, E.C. This book will rank foremost amid memorable autobiographies: it is a book which will live. In it Stanley reveals his inner self and the motive power of his life. This autobiography throbs with interest and is an inspiring book, which will deeply touch the heart and impress the mind of all who read it.

Cassell's Sixpenny Novels

SOME of the best books for holiday reading are included in Cassell's series of Sixpenny Novels. All the books in this series are by well-known and popular fiction writers, and are printed in clear type, and bound in attractive pictorial covers.

The latest addition to the series is Rider Haggard's successful novel, "Benita."

Attractive dropcards and leaflets have been prepared, and Messrs. Cassell will be glad to send a supply to booksellers on application.

The Darwin Centenary

THE Syndics of the Cambridge University Press have published "The Foundation of the Origin of Species: a sketch Written in 1842 by Charles Darwin." This was presented to the delegates of the various Universities and other learned societies who attended the celebration at Cambridge on Tuesday, June 22nd, on the occasion of the centenary of the birth of Charles Darwin, and of the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of the "Origin of Species." In connection with the Darwin Celebration, they have also published "The Order of the Proceedings," at 2s. 6d. net, which contains a sketch of Darwin's life, a map of Cambridge, and eleven illustrations. Both are nicely produced.

The Handel-Mendelssohn Festival

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO. send us a copy of "The Selection of Music" for the Handel-Mendelssohn Festival held at the Crystal Palace, London, S.E., on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, June 22nd, 24th, and 26th. It includes an appendix of solos performed at the General Rehearsal on Saturday, June 19th. The price of the book is 2s. 6d.

WE have just received from Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack Part 13 of "The National Gallery," which now only needs four more parts to complete this excellent series; also the last part of "The Wild Beasts of the World," and the last but one of "Beautiful Flowers and How to Grow Them."

Jane's "Fighting Ships"

SPECIAL interest centres in this year's issue of Jane's "Fighting Ships," published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., because, in addition to furnishing details of the world's war vessels, it pays very particular attention to the German Navy, on which all eyes are now turned. Nearly all the photographs given of important German ships have been taken within the last few months, and they show the remarkable new rig now fitted to German ships. A special effort has been made to secure plans of the new ships, including the latest "Dreadnoughts." In practically every case these plans are given from the official models and are approximately accurate. The inspection was naturally hasty, consequently minor details are necessarily approximate only, but main details are vouched for. The armaments given for all the new German ships differ from any hitherto published, but no effort has been spared to arrive at the correct armament. Another very remarkable feature of the new German ships is also recorded.

Recent discussions will intensify the interest with which the public will receive a work entitled, "The Passing of the Great Fleet," soon to be issued by Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., already the publishers of so many naval books. In this latest work concerning our position at sea there will be discussed such subjects as the reduction of training at sea, neglect of repairs, reduction of stores, diminution of construction, and it is the aim of the authors of this volume, Messrs. H. F. Wyatt and L. G. H. Horton-Smith, to make it a valuable work of reference upon naval affairs; with a complete index specially compiled by Mr. Horton-Smith. Included in the book there will be also a history of the controversy in the old Navy League which led to the foundation of the Imperial Maritime League.

The Publishers' Association

MESSRS. COLLIER & CO., of 2, Tudor Street, have been elected members of the Publishers' Association.

"A History of the Johnstones, 1191-1909"

MESSRS. W. & A. K. JOHNSTON, LTD., will publish early in the autumn a History of the Johnstones, 1191–1909, with descriptions of Border Life, by C. L. Johnstone, author of "Historical Families of Dumfries-shire." The book will be crown quarto and will contain photogravure frontispiece and sixteen plates of portraits and views, map of Annandale and seven pedigrees of the principal Johnstone families. The text will run to about 400 pages. It will be a limited edition of 150 copies and the price has been fixed at £2 2s. net. A list of subscribers will be printed in the book.

The principal feature of the British Empire Review for June is a review by Lord Milner of Col. Denison's "Struggle for Imperial Unity."

CONGRESS OF THE ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND

Held in London, June 18th to 22nd, 1909

Conversazione at Stationers' Hall

Friday Evening, June 18th.

On Friday evening, June 18th (by the courtesy of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.) the Associated Booksellers were invited to a Conversazione at Stationers' Hall. About three hundred guests accepted the invitation and nearly that number were present in addition to the office-bearers of the Publishers' Association and the Publishers' Circle, who were also asked.

The guests were received in the Hall by the Chairman (Mr. Arthur E. Miles) and the Senior Director (Mr. F. H. Miles).

The Hall and other rooms were tastefully decorated with plants, ferns, &c., and in the north end of the Hall were exhibited many of the old interesting Registers and a valuable collection of plate.

During the reception and in the intervals an excellent band played a charming selection of music; and as soon as the guests had arrived a capital programme of music was commenced, which included the well-known Westminster Singers, in addition to Mr. Bransby Williams in his impersonations of characters from Dickens and elsewhere and Mr. Walter Churcher in his humorous recitations. Miss Gladys Booth, A.R.A.M., sang two charming songs, and Mr. Josiah Booth presided at the piano. The full programme is appended.

The handsome souvenir programme was much admired and the notes on the Stationers' Company and their Hall, by Mr. C. R. Rivington (Clerk to the Company), greatly appreciated.

Mr. J. TRUSLOVE

Mr. J. A. DENNY

Another gift which was received with pleasure was the presentation to each guest of a copy of "Picturesque London" (published by Messrs. Simpkin). This is a little vellum-covered volume containing sixty views by Mr. W. J. Roberts, with brief descriptive notes.

The evening was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and hearty thanks are due to Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. for their kind hospitality.

The Annual Business Meeting

We are indebted to the Editor of "The Newsagent and Booksellers' Review" for this Report.

It spoke well for the interest taken in the work of the Association that practically every member in London attended the Annual Business Meeting, held in Stationers' Hall on Saturday morning. The President (Mr. H. W. Keay) occupied the chair. The Secretary, having read the minutes of the previous Annual Meeting, intimated letters of apology from Mr. Charles Eason (Dublin), Mr. Wilfrid Coates (Sunderland) and Mr. A. J. Lawrence (Rugby). Mr. Lawrence had, he said, recently lost a son.

Mr. F. Hanson moved a vote of sympathy with Mr. Lawrence in his bereavement. This was seconded by Mr. F. Denny, and carried, all present standing.

Report for the Year ending Dec. 31st, 1908.

THE Council, in presenting their Annual Report to the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, have pleasure in again congratulating them upon the continued success of the Association. The net system steadily asserts itself, and the number of signatories to the Net Book Agreement is continually increasing. In this connection it should be remarked that there are a number of booksellers throughout the kingdom who have signed the Net Agreement, and are thus being benefited by the work of this Association, yet they have refrained from enrolling themselves as members of it; and your Council, in calling attention to this, trust that it may suggest the desirability of every signatory to the Agreement becoming also a member of this Association, which has encouraged and stimulated the net system, and labours for its maintenance.

A synopsis of books published during the year has again been compiled under the direction of Mr. Robert Bowes, of Cambridge, from the English Catalogue of Books.

The following schedule will show the steady progress of the net system.

	Subject Books	Total Pub. Price £	s.	d.	NET Books	Total Pub. Price £	s.	d.
1901 -	5675	1211	8	7	2322	983	3	4
1902 -	6001	1239	10	11½	3050	1247	15	10½
1903 -	5108	951	6	10½	3581	1567	11	3
1904 -	5382	994	5	11	4303	1550	19	5
1905 -	5621	847	18	6½	4617	1480	12	8
1906 -	5843	814	2	1	5130	1616	18	7
1907 -	4920	872	17	5½	5426	1643	14	0
1908 -	4215	791	0	7	5558	1718	4	10

Your Council are glad to report the continued friendly feeling existing between the Publishers' Association and themselves, and that owing to this they have been able in many cases to secure advantages which otherwise it would not have been possible to obtain. They regret, however, that a reduced time limit for subject books was resolved on without consultation with your Council.

The issue of the Report of your Council's meetings keeps the members in close touch with the work of the Association, and the interest taken by the members in these Reports proves the wisdom of adopting that course.

The Council's good offices have in a few cases been devoted to preventing the offering of net books at a discount. It is a source of satisfaction to report that these cases are very few, and it has generally been found that the trouble has arisen more from want of thought than from any direct intention to evade the net book regulations.

Your Council desire to place on record the very successful gathering at the Annual Meeting held at Manchester, at the invitation of the Northern Branch, in May, when questions of importance received much consideration.

The Council regret that it has not been possible to carry out the suggestion of a Conciliation Board of Publishers and Booksellers, which was unanimously adopted at the last Annual Meeting, but advantage will be taken of any opportunity that may occur to re-open the subject.

The Council are glad to report the ending of the so-called Book War, the Times Book Club having accepted the rules of the Net Book Agreement. The Associated Booksellers have accepted the settlement. With this exception the past year has been singularly free from any burning question. The attempt by the Library Association to force the hands of the publishers as to the supply of net books at a discount signally failed, as was anticipated by your Council.

The question of the sevenpenny and shilling copyright book is receiving the careful and earnest attention of your Council, and as the Authors' Society is also seriously considering this question the Council hope that some steps may shortly be taken to prevent such early issue of these cheap editions as would be detrimental to the sale of those of higher price.

The question of the payment of postage or carriage on net books arose in a very acute form late in the year, and being near the Christmas season, your Council, recognising the importance of the matter, suggested a temporary acceptance of a £2 limit, and are glad to report that this has been most faithfully adhered to.

The Council are able to report that the past year has been remarkably free from the loss or removal of its members, and the number therefore remains about the same as in the previous year, but during peaceful times a lack of interest is noticeable and the Council would urge a personal duty upon each member to secure at the least one other member, remembering the adage that unity is strength.

It may be of interest to record that during the past eight years meetings of the Council have been held, all of which were attended by three members, and four attending seven, six, and five respectively. The Council think this may be accepted as a happy augury for the future interest and welfare of the Association.

The following members of the Council retire by rotation, and, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election:—Messrs. F. Denny, F. Hanson, F. R. Hockliffe, H. W. Keay, E. Pearce, F. Calder Turner, and W. J. Squires.

Signed on behalf of the Council,

EDWIN PEARCE, Hon. Sec.

LORD GUTHRIE

The President,

In moving the adoption of the Report and Balance Sheet, at once referred to the large increase in the number of net books published during the year 1908, and the decrease in the number of subject books. He pointed out that while in 1901, 5,675 subject books were issued, and 6,091 in 1902, only 4,215 were issued in 1908. The net books published in 1901 numbered 2,322. The number for 1908 was 5,658. (Applause.) In the published prices of these books, however, they would find signs of the times very plainly written. The total published price of the 2,322 books of 1901 was £983 3s. 4d. The total for the 5,658 books of 1908 was £1,718 4s. 10d. It was only a matter of arithmetic to see that this was not as satisfactory as it might have been. They were all feeling very much the decrease in the prices of books, hence the difficulty in keeping up their returns. (Hear, hear.) However, he thought they would all agree with him that the success of the Net System had been even greater than they could have anticipated when it was first started. (Applause.) Moreover, they had the satisfaction of knowing that, with a few exceptions, the trade had been extremely loyal to the system. (Hear, hear.) Of course, they had had difficulties, but in nearly every case, when the people causing the trouble had been appealed to and when it had been pointed out to them that there was such a thing as commercial morality and that the system was adopted for the benefit of the whole trade and not a few only, individual opinions had been sunk and the transgressors had thrown in their lot with the Association. He thought the year 1908, like its predecessors, had an individuality. The Northern Branch of the Association had been extremely good to the members, and they would never forget the hospitality shown to them at Manchester. (Applause.) Commenting upon the continuous friendly feeling with the Publishers' Association, Mr. Keay said that, of course, it was not possible for the booksellers to carry out the Net Book System alone. Although there had been disagreements between the two Associations, one realised that there were two sides to all questions. In every case where they had been able to prove to the Publishers' Association that their help was requisite to the well-being of the trade, that help had been forthcoming. (Hear, hear.) He wished to particularly emphasize, as he had done in the Council, the great help in a very trying time which they had had from Mr. Edward Bell. They would ever remember his assistance. If there had been a time when the Publishers' Association required at the helm one who could look at matters from both sides, it had been the time through which they had recently passed. There had not been a more loyal supporter of the booksellers than Mr. Edward Bell. (Applause.)

With regard to the suggested conciliation board, Mr. Keay said that although the Council of the Publishers' Association had not seen their way to agree to it, he would like to point out that they had always been prepared if any question arose which required consideration and which they thought could be best settled by both bodies meeting together, they had always granted the booksellers' request for an interview. Therefore, though they had not established a conciliation board the publishers had always, where possible, given help and support. They could not expect the two bodies always to see eye to eye, and although the booksellers had sometimes been beaten, yet they had always been received by the representatives of the Publishers' Association, and their requests had always been listened to with the utmost attention. (Applause.)

MR. KEAY then referred to the

which he considered one of the most serious aspects of the book trade. It was a serious matter to find, as they did find lately, a book brought out at 6s. and then within six months to be followed by an edition at sixpence or sevenpence. (Hear, hear.) When booksellers, as was often the case, had in stock copies of the more expensive edition, it was useless for them to endeavour to sell them. In these cases it was more a question for the author than for the publisher. He thought the booksellers should endeavour in the best possible way to let authors see that they ought to consider the trade when they have considerable offers for cheap editions of books that have not been long published. It was unfair to expect booksellers to stock books if they were to be subject to such competition. He thought that the booksellers, when ordering stock, should make a stipulation that if books were brought out in cheaper editions in whatever period they thought right—he would say not a day less than twelve months — they ought to have the right to ask for a credit note for what copies they had in stock of the original edition. (Hear, hear.) He thought if the trade did this, and brought home to the publishers that they could not buy books the sale of which was going to be impeded, they would by that means know the author would be brought to see the injustice of the position.

Continuing, Mr. Keay spoke of the effort recently made by certain firms to charge books 25.24 instead of 26.24. In consequence of the attitude taken up by the Council of the Association the firms concerned gave way, and withdrew their intention. This led him to speak of the lack of uniformity in publishers' prices. Some books were 25.24, and others 26.24. It was peculiar that two half-crown books should cost less than one five-shilling book. They did hope that the publishers would find it possible in the future to establish some uniformity in this respect.

Mr. KEAY regretted that there were still a number of booksellers who were not members of the Association. They obtained all the benefits, and they were not above writing to him if they were in any trouble. (Laughter.) And yet they were not members of the Association. (Shame.) He appealed to his hearers to do all in their power to induce these booksellers to join the Association. The more united they were the stronger they would be. Referring to the Balance Sheet, Mr. Keay thought they would all agree with him that it was most satisfactory. The figures did not represent the income of the Association by any means. Each Branch managed its own finances and settled its own expenses, contributing something each year towards the Head Office expenses. The Council were glad to be able to report a fairly good balance in hand. (Hear, hear.) They never knew what might happen, and it was always good policy to be prepared. As the Society grew he thought the balance in hand should increase. A pleasing fact in regard to the Association was that they had given up to the baby branch—the London Branch—(laughter)—the subscriptions of a number of Head Office members, and not only had the Branch paid them compound interest on what the Head Office had lost, but more—they had contributed £20 towards general expenses. (Applause.)

He knew the members appreciated the programme the London Branch had prepared for them, and all the work which had been done to make that a successful gathering. They regretted very much that he who had risen at the head of all this—Mr. Joseph Truslove—was so unwell that he had not been able to be with them on the previous evening, and they hoped sincerely he would be well enough to take his place in the chair at the evening's banquet. He was sure they would all feel it a very sad business if the President of the London Branch, after all his work, should be unable to take his position as chairman that evening. (Hear, hear.) They must not forget the other members of the entertaining Branch. He would not individualise. They had all worked very hard, and their efforts were highly appreciated. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. KEAY concluded by expressing hope that the present year would see the work of the Association as successful as it had been in the past, and that, if spared to meet again, the members would feel that the Council had done its best to improve the position of the trade. (Cheers.)

Mr. F. CALDER TURNER (hon. treasurer) briefly seconded, and the report and balance sheet was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Keay re-elected President

Mr. Keay having left the room, Mr. F. Hanson took the chair.

MR. ANDREW ELLIOTT said he had very great pleasure in moving that Mr. Henry Keay be re-elected President. They had been singularly fortunate in their President, and to lose him would be a disaster. Mr. Keay had done much work for them, and had done everything well. They all knew how much Mr. Keay had done for them and therefore it was unnecessary for him to take up time in commending his re-election. (Applause.) Mr. Elliott also moved that Mr. F. Hanson and Mr. F. Denny be re-elected Vice-Presidents, and paid eloquent testimony to the service they had rendered to the Association. (Applause.)

MR. PATTERSON seconded, saying that they not only honoured and respected Mr. Keay, but loved him. He spoke highly of Mr. Keay's energy, enthusiasm and tact, and said the members would be extremely foolish if they did not know when they had a good man. (Applause.)

The vote was carried unanimously and enthusiastically.

Mr. Keay, returning to the room, was informed by Mr. HANSON of his re-election. Mr. KEAY thanked the members for their renewed confidence. He was the more particularly pleased, as his re-election had been moved by one of the oldest booksellers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. HANSON said he was pleased to renew his position as Vice-President. All he did for the Association was a labour of love. It was a great pleasure to work with Mr. Keay. Mr. Hanson gave great pleasure to the meeting by informing them that Mr. Truslove hoped to be in his place at the banquet in the evening.

Mr. FRANK DENNY, in acknowledging his re-election, said he was only too pleased to serve with such a President, such a brother Vice-President, and such a Council. (Applause.) All loyal men and true. They had only the interests of the booksellers at heart.

Mr. Pearce Elected

Mr. E. W. COATES proposed the re-election as Hon. Secretary, of Mr. Edwin Pearce, and as Hon. Treasurer, of Mr. F. Calder Turner. They all knew the tremendous amount of work done by the Hon. Secretary. He was sure it would be for the utmost good of the Association if Mr. Pearce were re-elected.

Mr. JOHN BROWN seconded, and the proposal was unanimously and heartily adopted.

Mr. CALDER TURNER, responding, referred to the first public annual meeting of the Association, held on the 9th of June, 1890. He was especially gratified at his re-election, for, as the Association grew in numbers, in power and in importance, so the honour became greater, and the balance in hand larger. (Laughter.)

Mr. PEARCE, who was received with cheers, thanked the members for re-electing him. Whatever he could do in the interest of the booksellers he would do with pleasure. He would be happy to retain the position as long as he had the ability to fill it. (Applause.)

Messrs. F. Denny, F. Hanson, F. K. Hockliffe, H. W. Keay, E. Pearce, F. Calder Turner and W. I. Squires, members of the Council who retired by rotation, were unanimously re-elected on the motion of Mr. Richard Jackson, seconded by Mr. Iredale.

Mr. BROWN suggested that a member be added to the Council representative of the School Supply Trade.

Mr. PHILIP, of Liverpool, supported, saying the Council had no member connected with educational business. There would be in the future a considerable amount of discussion with reference to the discount on school books, and it would be of great interest to have on the Council a member of a firm directly interested in the school trade. He suggested that the President of the School Traders' Association for the time being should be a member of the Council of the Associated Booksellers.

Mr. KEAY promised that the matter should be dealt with by the Council on the Monday.

Votes of Thanks

Mr. ROBERT BOWES moved :—

"That a hearty vote of thanks be accorded to the London Branch for their hospitality and generous entertainment."

Having eulogised the vigour and helpfulness of the London Branch, Mr. Bowes said they had given the members a splendid programme, which he was sure they would all enjoy.

Mr. B. H. BLACKWELL seconded, and the vote was accorded with applause.

Mr. H. W. KEAY moved :

"That a hearty vote of thanks be accorded to Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co. for their grand entertainment at Stationers' Hall."

They all highly appreciated the forethought and kindness of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.—in other words, Messrs. Miles, Shaylor & Co.—one of the oldest bookselling firms in London. The entertainment in those rooms on the previous evening had been thoroughly appreciated by all. (Applause.)

Mr. F. HANSON seconded. The Conversazione had been an unqualified success. Everyone had said that it was a capital "kick-off."

The vote was accorded with applause.

On the proposition of Mr. FRANK DENNY, seconded by Mr. D. J. KNOX, a vote of thanks was accorded to the Publishers' Association for kind hospitality at the White City.

Mr. SQUIRES proposed and Mr. CUMMINS (Mayor of Exeter) seconded, a hearty vote of thanks to Messrs. John Dent & Co., Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, and the proprietors of the Garden City for their kind hospitality at the Garden City. The vote was accorded with applause.

Presentation to Mr. Keay and Mr. Pearce

After the meeting an interesting ceremony took place, when Mr. Keay and Mr. Pearce were made recipients of handsome presents in recognition of fourteen years service in the interests of the Association. The gift to Mr. Keay consisted of a handsome chimney clock, silver entrée dishes, and a mahogany writing desk and chair. To Mr. Pearce was presented a handsome silver tea and coffee service. The presentation was made by Mr. F. HANSON, who said :—

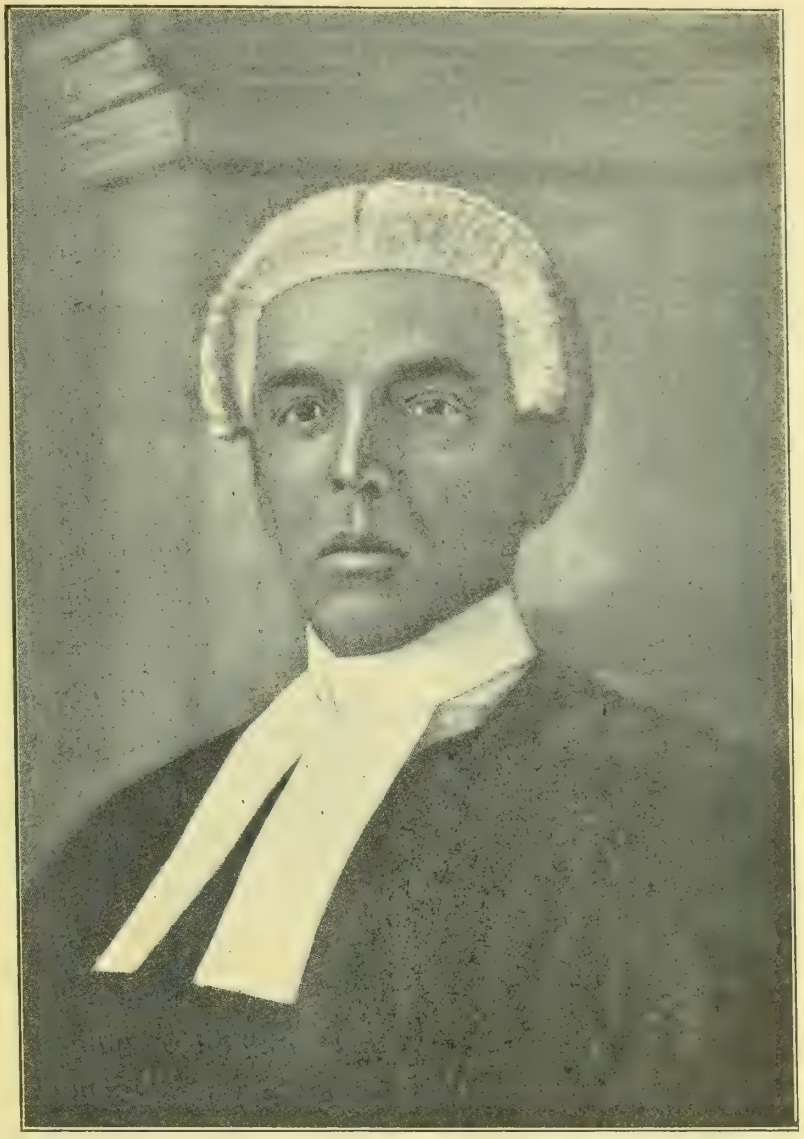
My colleagues have done me the honour to entrust me with the privilege—and I deem it a great privilege—of expressing to you, gentlemen, our very high appreciation of the services you have rendered for many years, not only to this Association, but to every member of the bookselling trade throughout the United Kingdom. It has been my good fortune, Mr. President to be very closely associated with you for fourteen years and upwards, and during that period you have presided over our deliberations and conferences with that tact and courtesy, that good feeling and geniality, and, shall I say, that firmness and forbearance, that have earned for you the respect and esteem, the gratitude, the friendship of every bookseller with whom you have come into contact.

Of your work, Mr. Secretary, may I say how deeply gratified we are to you for the enormous amount of spade work you have done in the interests of this Association. No time has been too long and no undertaking too arduous. You have worked early and late with an enormous correspondence, with the preparation of our reports and minutes of proceedings. By your splendid organisation, your self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause you have so much at heart, by your solicitude at all times for the comfort and welfare of our members, and by your unfailing courtesy you have won the admiration and heartfelt gratitude of all your confrères.

I have, therefore, Mr. President, on behalf of my colleagues, the greatest possible gratification in asking your acceptance of this testimonial—together with aluminium clock—a set of entrée dishes, and a writing desk and chair, which I trust may be of service to you and Mrs. Keay for many years to come.

I have also equal pleasure, Mr. Secretary, in asking your acceptance of this testimonial and silver tea and coffee service, which I trust will be of service to you and Mrs. Pearce. We do this, gentlemen, with the assurance of our gratitude and our affection, in the hope that you both may be spared for many years to come to continue with us the work we have undertaken for the welfare of our profession. (Applause.)

In acknowledging, Mr. KEAY said he found it more difficult to express his feelings than any task he had ever had to perform. It was difficult, because he realised that these gifts were from the heart of the booksellers of England. How could he thank them? Their kindness to him during the past fourteen years had been overwhelming. Although he had most difficult duties to perform it had always been realised that he had no selfish motive, but simply the pure motive of trying to do his best for the booksellers of the United Kingdom. He was sorry his wife was not present. She would appreciate very much these fine gifts. He would like to repeat what he said at Manchester. He had a good helpmeet, always willing to give advice, and never grudging the time he devoted to the Association. On behalf of his wife and himself he thanked them most heartily.



Mr. PEARCE, who had a hearty reception, said he feared he would be unable to say all that was in his heart. He had been associated with the booksellers throughout the United Kingdom for nearly thirty years, and during that time he had established many happy friendships. He well remembered the great kindness he received when he first came to London thirty years ago, from the then head of the firm styled Jones & Evans, Mr. Edward Jones. Mr. Pearce referred to the great loss that firm had sustained in the recent death of Mr. Andrew F. Tait, "a man who loved his trade." In those days there was no Booksellers' Association, but with the introduction of the Net System, things began to improve. He hoped it would not be long before the noble craft came into its own again. (Hear, hear.)

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

The Story of the British Antarctic Expedition, 1907-9, will be told by LIEUTENANT SHACKLETON, M.V.O., and will be published in two volumes in November. Mr. Heinemann begs to announce that there will be issued simultaneously with the ordinary edition of this work, an Autograph Edition de Luxe, limited to 350 numbered copies, price Ten Guineas net. Each copy of this edition will be signed by Lieutenant Shackleton and by every member of the Expedition. This unique feature will certainly give this edition an exceptional and permanent value. Orders will be booked as received, and under no circumstances will the number of 350 be exceeded.

Mr. EDWARD BELL
Vice-President of the Publishers' Association

Mr. JOSEPH TRUSLOVE (the Chairman), proposing the toast of "His Majesty the King," said:—My Lord, Ladies and Gentlemen. The first toast on our list is one that is sure to win an enthusiastic reception, for Edward VII. is a King we can esteem and admire. (Cheers.) He is a good sportsman, he is courageous and he trusts the people, as exampled by the manner in which he stepped into the crowd on the last Derby Day. He has ability, good judgment, and tact, and in my opinion, ladies and gentlemen, the greatest of these qualities is tact. (Applause.)

A tactless king is a danger, but a king who is tactful can do a power of good, particularly in our foreign relations, and our King does a power of good both at home and abroad, and I am sure we all say, God bless him and long may he be with us. Ladies and Gentlemen, I give you "His Majesty the King." (The toast was loyally and enthusiastically received.)

After the toast of the King, the Chairman said: I wish to say a few informal words, but although informal they are sincere, and I am sure will be endorsed by all Londoners present.

On behalf of the London Branch of the Associated Booksellers and on behalf of those good friends who have so generously helped us to provide this entertainment, I wish to give a hearty and sincere welcome to our country friends who are with us to-night. (Hear, hear.) I welcome you to this gathering, and I welcome you to London, and during your stay here I hope you will have such an enjoyable time that you may leave with regret, and perhaps a still greater appreciation of the dear old place than you already have.

It may perhaps seem strange to some of you when I say that I believe that most of us who live in London think there is no place like it in the world, and we think this particularly for its literary associations. For five hundred years, from Chaucer to Meredith—London has been the home of so many of our great British authors, and it is the home of so many of the great living authors and artists, including those who have honoured us by their presence here to-night, but I must not laud up London but welcome you to it, and I do so again, and I hope you will have a very happy time. (Hear, hear, and applause.)

Mr. JAS. MACLEHOSE, M.A., in proposing the toast of "The Publishers' Association" said:—Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen, I have heard it said that an after-dinner speaker frequently begins by saying how deeply he feels his inability to perform his task, and then shows in a practical form how well grounded his fears were. However much I share these feelings, I shall not presume to waste your time by dwelling on this; but in this great gathering, which we owe to the London Branch of the Booksellers' Association, I may be permitted to express our warm thanks for their abundant hospitality, and also my regret that they have not entrusted this toast to one of their own members, or to someone more exclusively identified with the bookselling trade than I can claim to be.

Sir, to-night all of us here are connected with literature, science or art. I see round me not only authors, artists, editors, publishers, and booksellers, but representatives of the great trades of paper-making, printing and book-binding, which put thoughts in a visible and permanent form.

It has been suggested to me by a cynical, if humorous, friend, that the only people connected with literature who are not represented here to-night are the readers of books. But, Sir, we all represent that class. We all take a vital interest and pride in the matters with which our daily life is associated; and well we may, not only for its own sake, but because we are inheritors of great traditions and great treasures. (Hear, hear.)

In literature and art this is more so than in science. Science can look back on great names, but its achievements within the last generation have, perhaps, out-stripped its past. In almost every branch of scientific pursuit—whether in theoretical or applied science—we see to-day a proud contempt for the difficulties of former generations, an eager and a hopeful search into the depths of Nature's secrets. And if we wish an instance in applied science, we have it in the determined attempts to sail far above the surface of the ocean, as well as in its submarine depths.

In literature and art the case is different. We have a past to look back to, that is one of the great heritages of the world. With all respect for the work of the present day, neither authors nor publishers, neither the producers nor the distributors of books dare forget the reverence due to their great predecessors, nor fail to acknowledge that a great part of our work lies in the making more widely known, or, it may be, more clearly understood, the works of the great minds of all countries, and of all former days. As we pursue our daily work, we live in noble company, and are surrounded by the records of the thoughts that have moved the world. In all labour there may be both pleasure and dignity, but I claim that in our work, whatever its difficulties or anxieties, we have an inspiration of which we may well be proud; and if any man whose work is with books has not some share in this feeling, perhaps we may agree that he has not found his right vocation. To use the words of a great author, "Though inland far we be, our souls have sight of the Immortal Sea."

Sir, this is the field of labour of the members of the Publishers' Association. (Applause.)

I have no wish to exaggerate the share that the bookselling trade, and the manufacturing departments, have in this empire of thought, and I am well aware how relatively small it must be. Indeed, I am warned by the story of the picture-frame maker who went to the Royal Academy to see the frames which he had made to surround some of the master works, and having hurried in to find his frames, he remarked to a friend with much self-satisfaction, "I am on the line again." That, Sir, is not an error we are likely to commit. We do not pride ourselves on the value of the work which we may be able individually to accomplish, but on the value of the work with which we are associated. (Hear, hear.)

In the business connected with literature the publisher has the widest field and greatest responsibilities. To him it falls to direct the material production and the distribution of these books, great and small; and, what is even more important, to make choice of his manuscripts, and sometimes to suggest to authors new pieces of work.

Last night many of us were present in Stationers' Hall, round which linger associations connected with publishers of past days, and of the stationers who preceded them. I like the word "Stationer" in its old meaning, which is very different from that of to-day. Now we associate it with the sale of materials for writing; in the old days the stationer used these materials himself; he wrote the manuscripts and sold them, or lent them out to scholars. As he stood in his stance in the old streets round the Sorbonne in Paris, he was not only publisher, bookseller and librarian, he represented our printer, and he had associated with him the parchment maker, the illuminator, the bookbinder and the iron worker. This last trade reminds us of the rarity of books in those days, for in public libraries at least it was the custom to fasten very many of the volumes with iron chains either to their shelves, or to the desks on which they lay.

Part of the work which was done by the stationer of old is now done by the publisher. We have here to-night the heads of two houses which for nearly two centuries have handed down the best traditions of the days when Defoe, Samuel Johnson and Sir Walter Scott were among their authors; and with increasing activity they add to the greatness of the names they have inherited. Since the houses of Messrs. Longman and Mr. Murray were founded many changes have taken place in the publishing world. New names have sprung up, old names have gone, but to-day there is the same energy and ability, the same enthusiasm for work, the same desire to present ideas in a beautiful outward form, which we have perhaps inherited from the stationers of five hundred years ago. (Applause.)

Some of us I know are but hewers of wood and drawers of water. To others falls the lot of influencing the form in which literature shall appear, or it may be of encouraging some works and suggesting others. To a very few is left the task of writing the words that will last, and become the common property of the race. But we all, authors, publishers, booksellers, have interests in common, and I am convinced that it is well to remember that, however much our work varies, however unimportant certain sections of it may be as compared with others, in the end we are all part of one whole, and what is to the benefit or injury of one section reacts to the benefit or injury of all. And it is in this spirit of our all being members of a great profession or trade with a great history and with great opportunities, that I give you the toast of the Publishers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland, coupled with the name of Mr. Heinemann, its President. (Cheers.)

Mr. HEINEMANN, in replying to the toast of the Publishers' Association, said:—I find myself in somewhat of a difficulty this evening.

On such a pleasant and festive occasion I should wish to forget for a few hours the trade—the business which is the basis of this splendid gathering.

Unfortunately, however, such opportunities of meeting are very few, and with some hesitation and apology I propose, with your consent, to ask your consideration of some aspects of the existing condition of our mutual interests—as the cry of the pessimist and the croak of the prophet are loud in the land.

I think I shall do no harm in alluding to the present condition of the bookselling trade and especially to the publication and sale of novels, though I must admit that I am not sure of having anything very new to add to what has already been said and written on the subject.

I am assured on all hands that the trade of bookselling is in a bad way and many different causes are given for this. As a member of the Council of the Publishers' Association from its start, I know that our Association has been appealed to again and again to remedy bad trade, to cure a disease which we could not even diagnose. We have tried to do our best when complaints reached us, but we have not discovered within our reach a remedy for bad trade, far less for the alleged reduction in the sale of books which we could not ourselves be sure of. There were times when we were forced to become sceptical of the complaints we were supposed to cure, and were tempted to look upon the body of complaining booksellers in the light of Molière's "Malade Imaginaire." I think everyone here will agree with me that, since the establishment of the net book system, the book trade has improved in England. And if the Publishers' Association has anything to pride itself upon, it is surely the fact that it has—with the co-operation of the Associated Booksellers—been able to establish a system which is constantly extending and which I hope some day will be universal, so that the public will forget altogether that any sort of books could ever be bought at less than the published price. (Hear, hear.)

Recent complaints among publishers no less than booksellers have been concerned with the sale of novels, and it is significant to note that novels are the only considerable class of books still being published at prices allowing of discount to the public. The net system has been applied to them only tentatively, and never on a scale sufficiently important to test it really. Since the introduction of the net book system, the public has learned to respect books other than novels as objects of definite value, and, although the fixing of the discount on novels in different localities might have been expected to have had a similar effect, it has utterly failed to inspire in the public the confidence I believe it is feeling increasingly in books published at the price they are sold at. Novels are at times sold at the full published prices, and at other times and in other places at discounts varying from 10 per cent. to 25 per cent. I believe that this variation of the prices charged is one of the causes which have led to distrust, and inclined purchasers to doubt whether they were really receiving adequate value for money.

There are other causes which I think have made the public shy of purchasing 6s. novels—causes for which authors are responsible, causes attributable to the action of publishers and causes which can be laid at no other door than that of the booksellers. I will enumerate briefly a few of these causes without however drawing on myself the odium of application.

There is first of all the only too obvious fact of over-production—so obvious that you will not ask me for statistics.

Secondly and equally obvious is the production of worthless books, and further the fact that books have been artificially spun out to bulk within covers at 6s., which contain in reality little more reading matter than the old-fashioned 1s. book contained. Gentlemen, we have all seen 6s. novels of less than 40,000 words, and we have seen others exceeding 300,000 words. It may be objected that quantity is not a criterion of literature, but a man who pays 4s. 6d. for a book and expects five or six evenings' entertainment from it, feels cheated if he gets through that book in a couple of hours. There is in the whole range of commerce no commodity for which the public is asked to pay indiscriminately one price, whether it be a pound or an ounce that is offered.

To those who would still object that quantity has nothing to do, or should have nothing to do, with literature, I should like to reply that quality is often equally ignored in the fixing of the price of a novel. The ripe work of experience brings in the shape of a novel no more money than the slipshod writing of young ladies and gentlemen who can afford to spend £50 or £100 on the production of a few hundred copies of their foolish vapourings. Out of this indifference to quantity and quality in the publication of novels has grown a habit in the retail trade of distinguishing too little between what is worth selling and pushing and what had better be left unrecommended. A novel in some retailers' hands is (to use an Irishism) a novel, and if the terms on one good and worthy book are slightly less advantageous than they are on an inferior one, I have known an instance (human frailty you will say) when a bookseller has recommended the latter book over the former. I do not assert that this is at all a general practice, but we must not forget that the sale of every bad and unworthy one is a nail in the coffin of 6s. novels as a class.

There are other causes, and among them one which has recently been held responsible almost exclusively for the alleged reduction in the sale of 6s. novels. This cause is the production of cheap editions of novels in cloth covers. The angry correspondence which has raged, and the bitter feelings that have been aroused, have been caused almost entirely through the introduction of this form of re-publication of novels—especially when this re-publication has taken place within a comparatively short time of the first issue. I will not venture to enquire into the truth of these allegations here. It is my belief that there are more causes than one responsible for the supposed decrease in the popularity of novels to-day.

It is said that, whereas in the past 25 per cent. of all 6s. novels published were sold to the Circulating Libraries and 75 per cent. through the booksellers, to-day the ratio is reversed, 75 per cent. going to the Circulating Libraries and 25 per cent. to the booksellers. I am not able to say that this calculation is a correct one, but there can be no doubt that the enormous increase of Circulating Libraries has had considerable effect on the sale of 6s. novels—tempting the public even more than in the old days to borrow rather than to buy novels.

I consider that this tendency has grown beyond reasonable limits; and this is so because the public has become distrustful of a price that is fictitiously fixed and arbitrarily adapted to special and local conditions; distrustful of the article provided; distrustful because the quality is often disappointing; distrustful because the quantity has sometimes been dishonestly small; distrustful because re-issue at a very cheap price was threatened at so early a period that many buyers prefer to wait until the book is available at not many more pence than the shillings asked for it on first publication.

It is my belief that if the novel in England is to be put on a sound business basis again, and if we wish to revert to the old proportion of 25 per cent. to the libraries and 75 per cent. to the booksellers, its publication must be more economically honest than it is at present. I do not wish to take away from the sales to Circulating Libraries—in fact, I'd increase them, if I could, tenfold—but I wish so to increase the sales to and through the booksellers that their share represents in the end 75 per cent. of the total sales. (Applause.)

I feel that a change in the nature I have indicated has become imperative. What precisely is it to be? I believe that the most likely steps towards the accomplishment of this end are the adoption of a net price for novels; a differentiation in the price of long and short novels, and, most of all, a close co-operation between authors, publishers and booksellers to see that in quantity as well as in quality the books offered to the public represent value for money. Whether the change will require temporary sacrifice is a matter which experience alone can show, but, even if it does, I feel convinced that good will be reaped in the end. I plead for an honest article at an honest price. (Hear, hear.) What this price should be, is a matter which cannot be defined at such a time and place. I know that there are some who advocate raising the price on first publication—a circulating library edition to be followed by a bookshop edition—but the general tendency of the day lies towards cheapening everything—books included. Probably there is no other course open to us than to reduce the price of novels and to hope for increased sales.

What I feel strongly is that if the changes made are in the right direction, if we can re-establish confidence among the public, then, Gentlemen, and then alone can we look forward to a great uplifting in the bookselling world, which will be an advantage to readers, to authors, publishers and booksellers alike. (Prolonged applause.)

Mr. JOHN MURRAY, J.P., said:—Mr. Truslove, Ladies and Gentlemen, it is with especial pleasure and gratification that I feel called upon to address you to-night. It is a long time since I had the privilege of addressing a large gathering of our trade, and I feel the privilege especially to-night because I regard this gathering as a sort of symbol and a climax of a great movement which has been going on for many years, and perhaps those of us who are behind the scenes are only able to judge of how great the movement has been. With your permission I would like to touch upon it in a few words. When I first came to London to work, some thirty-seven years ago, the craft of letters was, if I may say so, divided into watertight compartments—the Authors, the Publishers, and the Booksellers. There was a wall—I will not call it a wall of suspicion—between them, and each thought that the other was doing something they ought not to do. And then the first to make a move in the matter, the first to associate themselves together for the purposes of their craft, were the authors, and they started the Authors' Society. I do not know whether they knew much about authors in general. I am quite sure they knew very little then about publishers in general. (Laughter.) They started on two major premises, which were these: that the authors were all innocent sheep, and that the publishers were all guilty goats. (Laughter.) You may well suppose that on these two premises, or from these two premises, all sorts of conclusions might be drawn. Those conclusions first took shape in what we used to call the Byzantine Decrees. Things went on, and we used to hold some little meetings in my father's dining-room, meetings of the Publishers; and these gradually grew, and we formed the Publishers' Association. We came in touch with the authors, and began to feel that all the goats were not on one side, and all the sheep were not on the other. (Laughter). And then to us two bodies arose the bitter cry of the publishers: "We are ruining ourselves by our fierce competition; cannot you come over and help us?" Out of those Associations arose what Mr. Heinemann has alluded to: that instrument, the "Net Book Agreement." From that time, I am thankful to say it, there began a breaking down of those barriers which divided us from one another, a breaking down of those unworthy suspicions which we had entertained towards one another; and there

grew up a feeling of confidence, a feeling of brotherhood among all of us in the craft; and that confidence has gone on increasing to the present day, and has rendered possible this great meeting which we see here to-night. It is an enormous step. I do not say that all controversies have ceased—far from it. We are living bodies, and in a living body there must be controversies. But I would ask you to note that of recent years those controversies have not been amongst ourselves and against one another; but we have been fighting—well, have fought—in a common cause, and we believe that common cause is the healthy growth and welfare of literature in this country. (Applause.) We meet now, not as we did, if I may say so, fist to fist, but we go forward hand in hand. We have made an alliance, an alliance defensive, but not offensive. There are many points of interest; Mr. Heinemann and Mr. Maclehose have touched on some of them; and I tremble to think what would happen if we went further into this question; because I do not know that many of us would get home for breakfast on Monday morning; but there are two points which I venture to think have not yet attracted the full attention that they ought, and the attention of all who are connected or associated with our trade. I would like to call attention briefly to them to-night. The first is this: there is a growing feeling amongst a certain class of the public that copyright is a privilege extended by the public to the author; and I want you to realise as most of you do, that this is not the case. If ever there was an inherent right to a man, it is the right to the product of his own brain. (Hear, hear, and applause.) When the Legislature stepped in, they did not say, "We give you the privilege of enjoying the product of your own brain; but in the interests of the public we restrict the privilege. We hope that in the end, and we think that in the end, the public should have the full enjoyment of those great works which you have created. But we wish to protect you for a time, and to give you the fullest protection during that time." And the Act of Parliament is a restriction of a natural right; it is not a case of a right by the public. What does the public know of literature? Has the public ever written a book? If the public would write a book, be it good or bad, I would publish it for them, and I would ask all to dine on the proceeds. (Laughter.) You know the public enjoys to the full, and the politician gives them the enjoyment to the full, but the authors lose the full enjoyment, and I would beg you all so far as you can to fight that idea. I sat on a Departmental Committee, when it came out strongly in evidence that many believe this to be the case.

The other point I would like to bring before you is this. Let me ask you to believe that it is a mistake, although it is a belief which is held by many people, it is a mistake that cheapness ensures success, either in popularity or in finance. It does not. (Hear, hear.) Cheapness may enormously increase the circulation of the book, but it will not give it popularity. And I would ask you to note that these cheap editions of which we hear so much do not start with a new author ab initio. They wait to see those who have attained success in another field. They pick them out, and then they make them cheap. But that is a very different thing. Believe me, ladies and gentlemen—I speak to the authors—that if you remove from yourselves and from those who are following in your footsteps, the younger authors, if you remove from them that field on which success and popularity is first obtained, you will do an incalculable injury to literature. (Hear, hear.)

A proposal has been made in the last few days that for a year authors should cease to write and publishers should cease to publish. (Laughter.) This is an old story. When I came as a very greenhorn to London I remember proposing it in a speech, but I have changed my mind now. Only think! Supposing for a year that all these distinguished authors we see here to-night and all the others were to cease to write, and we humbler publishers were to cease to publish! Other people would write—not so well. Other people would publish—I hope not so well—(laughter)—and we should all be left out in the cold. That, believe me—I will not call it a counsel of perfection—is a counsel of despair. Ladies and Gentlemen, forgive me if I revert to a story about my grandfather, which I daresay is familiar to many of you here. In the days when the height of gracious hospitality was supposed to be making your friends as drunk as you possibly could, he was dining with a friend of his in town. He was plying him with the bottle, and he turned round at last and said, "I see what you are after; you want to turn your wine-cellar into your bookseller." (Laughter.) Well, it occurred to me to-night, because we are all financiers now. And I want to draw a little contrast between the wineseller and the bookseller. The wineseller's wares lie in his cellar, gathering merit, so I may say, and increasing in value. The gentleman who has bought a bottle of the old port this year, or bought a few dozens of it, a year or two hence wants some more, and it goes on increasing in value, whereas the stocks in our cellars and warehouses, I am sorry to say, do not increase in value. At least, that is my experience. Think what a time we should have — only think of it—if our books lying in our cellars were gradually to increase in value. Think of "Pilgrim's Progress" or "Robinson Crusoe." What a time there would be before us! Just think of that! What would the Chancellor of the Exchequer say? (Laughter.) Where would the mysterious bird of his be that we hear of? There are none of his hens come to roost in our cellars, and there is nothing of the sort for him to come and rob. I only wish it were so. I now turn to what is the more direct object of my speech. And here it gives me the greatest pleasure to have to propose the toast of the Associated Booksellers. They have met before, in Edinburgh, in Manchester, and in other great cities, and they have had a great welcome. I cannot tell you what pleasure it gives to us to see them here assembled in London, and I hope that those who have come up for the purpose will feel that they have not come in vain, and that our welcome has not been behind the others which they have received. I hope they will not listen just for a few words whilst I am talking about them.

I now address myself to those who are the booksellers. We know booksellers may make mistakes. We know that sometimes an author writes furiously to his publisher that he went to get a copy of his book, and that he was told it was out of print and unobtainable. Then he writes to his publisher: "What on earth do you mean that my books are not sold? I am told it is out of print." Then, of course, there are those others who say: "Why isn't my book on all the bookstalls of the kingdom?" Ladies and Gentlemen, if every book were on the bookstalls, you would need to have two stations; one for the books and one for the passengers. The thing is an impossibility.

I want you authors to realise, if you do not do so already, what enormously valuable service these booksellers render to you. Do you know what is the difference between a man who sells books knowing something of the inside, taking an interest in literature, loving the books for their own sakes, and the man who sells them like a parcel of soap or a box of pills? It is the greatest difference; and you must be aware of what invaluable service it is to you to have these men really working for your interests all over the country. Some years ago there was a friend of mine, an author who brought out a book. He was a wealthy man, and he turned over in his mind how he could help his own book. He came to me and said, "I tell you what I am going to do. When the book comes out I am going down Oxford Street and buy a copy of my book at every bookseller's shop." Well, I naturally encouraged him in this idea. (Laughter). I would recommend it to all of you. But I would caution you about one thing. When you go to Mr. Truslove's handsome shop in Oxford Street, intending to buy a copy of your own book, do not be inveigled by him into buying half a dozen copies, all sevenpenny novels you see lying on the desk instead of your own book. They are novels of other people; they are not nearly so good as your own work, and are not really doing the good you intend to do. Go to (other) shops; you will find all the excellent ones there, and you will do a great deal of good to your own book. The beauty of this plan is that you need not stop in London. You can go to Edinburgh, you can go to all the great towns of the kingdom and do the same thing over and over again. Well, now, Ladies and Gentlemen, the trade of bookselling and the trade of book-publishing is not, as the world goes now, an immensely prolific business. I defy anyone in this room to point to any publisher who has become a millionaire from publishing books. Still more do I think they will find it impossible to find any bookseller who has become a millionaire. It is a trade which requires a certain amount of devotion and interest. It is not a trade on which one can become rich beyond the bounds of avarice. So I ask you to-night with all my heart to drink the toast of prosperity and welfare to the Associated Booksellers. And it is a double pleasure to propose this toast in that I have to associate with it the name of my good friend, Mr. Alderman Keay. (Applause.) To those outside I would say, you do not know what labour Mr. Keay has bestowed and what skill he has bestowed on this great movement. I would venture to liken Mr. Keay to the main shaft of the machine (and he is not a crank shaft, I can tell you). He is at once the main shaft and the safety-valve; and, what is more, he has a quality which is perhaps rarer—he is the lubricator of the machine. Mr. Keay has wonderful powers of smoothing over little difficulties by his personal geniality and the personal care which he gives to all matters.

Ladies and Gentlemen, I venture to give you the toast of the Associated Booksellers, and may it live long and prosper!

Mr. Henry W. Keay, J.P. (President of the Associated Booksellers), was received with applause. He remarked that he had had to respond to the toast now for nearly fourteen years, and he feared he might possibly repeat what he had said before. But he could assure them that, although he spoke with a certain amount of diffidence, it was also with a large amount of pleasure. He had no hesitation in saying that if it had not been for the hearty collaboration and never-ceasing work of Mr. John Murray, he did not think they would have arrived at the position in which they were now. Mr. Murray had spoken most kindly of him, but he (Mr. Keay) felt that they owed a great deal to Mr. Murray. The gathering that evening was a gathering at the request of the baby of their Association. He had spoken on that for a few minutes in the morning. He would inform those not then present that the London Branch was the youngest branch of the Association of Booksellers. He thought they would agree with him when they looked upon the gathering that evening that they were extremely proud of their youngest branch. Might the next child be even stronger and healthier! He alluded to the recent "plot" against the whole of the bookselling trade of England, and said they rejoiced to know the plot failed. They rejoiced still more to know that they were living now in times of peace, when the lion was lying down with the lamb, and they were friendly one with the other. He would not tell them who the lion was, nor the lamb. He would leave them to find that out for themselves. They rejoiced that they could look forward, might he say, to many years of peace; because it was when peace reigned that prosperity was more likely to be. He was reminded of an excellent address which the now President of the Publishers' Association gave them some few years back, when he finished with these words: "Gentlemen, the future is for you, the united Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland." Mr. Heinemann preached a sermon, and they had endeavoured to carry out his words. They were united. They were also reminded that in meeting together for dinner, and also for business purposes, the corners were rubbed off, and by associating themselves together they were enabled to look upon others in a very different light from what they had done before. They felt there was good in all. They had one law, one object only in view. That was, not only the benefit of the condition of the booksellers individually, but as a collective body, and he trusted that would ever be the Association of Booksellers. (Cheers.)

Mr. Justice Darling, in proposing the toast of "Literature," said it was one without which the members of the two Associated Societies could no more live than the people who wrote. The point of view of the publishers, bookseller and the writer, as Mr. Murray had said, had been different. But that was entirely due to the writer and the publisher arguing from false premises. It might be. They argued from very different premises. The premises of the writer were in Grub Street; the premises of the publisher were in Albemarle Street. (Laughter.)

How could one expect them to arrive at the same conclusion? But now, he gathered that an interchange of residence had taken place. Mr. Murray had told them that there were certain people who contributed nothing, either to inform or scandalise the public; who were jealous of the law which conceded copyright to those who did either of these things; and he told them that a book was an outcome of the brain of the author, and because it was so it was right that he should possess it. He (the speaker) quite agreed; it seemed right. It might be right to possess anything—a matter which was disputed; but there was one thing which might as well be generally recognised, and it was that anybody who had not written a book ought to be taxed, so that they might take advantage of undeveloped possibilities. Supposing a man bought a piece of land, and it was discovered that there was coal or copper which they could not possibly get because they had not the means. Another man would help him, but he must pay the value of that coal or copper. It would take a certain number of years to do it, but pay it he must, and it was useless to say it could not be produced. It was the same thing with the book. Supposing one had not written a book, to use the same argument. There would not be many people who had not written books, so that it would be all the more expedient to tax them. (Laughter.) Mr. Heinemann had told them that what they suffered from in the way of literature nowadays was that the quantity was too great and the quality was too little. Whose fault was that? If there were no publishers, depend upon it there would be no authors. Just as he frequently heard it said where he passed most of his time: "If there were no receivers there would be no thieves." (Laughter.) But who was to judge whether there was too much or too little? Whether the quality be high or low? The quality of many things was submitted to the judgment of most of the people; that was so with literature. But, assuming that all in that room were agreed that what the majority liked was not literature, that the real literature was that which appealed to very few, there were those who thought that the best of all was admired by the author himself, and never by the few.

He did not know what literature they would say was good and what was not. They said, "I like it." There were those who, when they produced a thing, if it failed, would say, "It is too good to succeed." But he took it that the highest possible criterion of success in the case of the purchaser of the article was, if he had to submit it to a person who could decide whether the public should be a judge of it at all. If he had to submit it to the Censor, and the Censor said, "It is horrible!" the author would be convinced that at last he had produced something really worthy of him. Whereas, the public was perfectly right, the Censor was perfectly wrong when he said the public would be quite rightly shocked, and that he would preserve the book from being condemned by the public. They must decide what was literature for themselves. The only safe thing was to eliminate most of what was written. There would still remain of what was written at the present day goodness knows how little. They were all agreed that certain things which had been produced deserved to be called literature. There were things a few lines long which everybody admitted to be literature, such as Grey's Elegy. Such things were included in the toast. He did not think the age in which they were could decide precisely what literature was worthy to be ranked as such, and what was not. It was something like what would be submitted to them in the next toast, that had something of fashion and something of instruction about it. The picture of the moment and the book of the moment had, to his mind, certain characteristics in common. There were times when they must be sketches, there were times when they must be pictures, there were times when they must be—he did not know whether it was a compliment or not—he could only use the word academic. He believed that the true test of literature and of art, in the sense of painting and sculpture, was form, style; and he did not think that any people who wrote with bad style would in the long run be held to have contributed anything to the literature of this or any other land.

Mr. W. L. COURTNEY, M.A., in reply, said:—It is always an honour and a task to respond for Literature, and sometimes one is more conscious of the task than of the honour. I will not be so ungrateful as to say that on the present occasion the burden is one which makes the task unwelcome; but I do venture to point out that in a company of men associated with the production of books in various ways—either with the writing of them, or with the publishing of them, or with the selling of them to the vast body of the public—any man will find it not quite the easiest task in the world to speak about books—not nearly so easy a task, for instance, as in the relatively less instructed companies which call themselves Royal Society of Literature, or Royal Literary Fund. And there is another thing, too, which rather weighs upon my spirits. I am afraid that in a toast like this I have, on a considerable number of previous occasions, said all that it was in my power to say. You remember the man whose proud boast it was that he had nothing to do with the fantastic rubbish of science and the various "ologies." He was rebuked by his wife—it must have been his wife, because there is no critic more alert, more persuasive, more unwearied, except, possibly, a maiden aunt—(laughter)—he was, at all events, rebuked by some critic of the opposite sex, who remarked to him "There is one 'ology' to which you must constantly plead guilty—tautology." (Laughter.) Well, Gentlemen, I must plead guilty to the same vice. It is not the first time that I have either proposed or responded for Literature, although I catch myself sometimes hoping that it may be the last. (Cries of No! No!)

There are certain definite subjects which occur naturally to the mind, a certain range of questions which are clamouring for an answer. Are we as fond of books as we used to be? Is the noble calling of a bookseller as profitable an undertaking as it used to be? Have publishers the same quality to deal with as they used to have? To say nothing of that curiously insistent problem which seems to haunt the mind of publishers and booksellers alike—the unending quest of the proper price at which to produce a novel. The only form of sport which publishers and booksellers allow themselves is the hunt for the ideal price of a novel. Some unrepentant sinners actually deplore the old three-volume novel which used to be published at 31s. 6d. Others vaunt the success of the 6s. novel. A third section want to produce romances in paper covers at the price of two shillings or half a crown. While, lastly, the pioneers in a new movement point out that the only way of salvation lies in a sevenpenny novel. Well, for all of us who deal with books, these are difficult problems to solve, more especially as they are related to the still larger question whether, with regard to literature in general, we ought to be hopeful or pessimistic.

Of course, we have all been having a bad time lately, and publishers and booksellers have as much right—or, if you prefer it, as little right—to object to Mr. Lloyd George and his Budget as other members of the community. (Hear, hear.) The sad and lamentable fact is—which we must never forget—that for the majority of people books themselves are a luxury, not a necessity—a luxury like champagne and motor cars, except that people will not put down their motor cars or fail to drink their champagne, but they do decide, in moments of financial crisis, not to buy any books. We hope, however, that this is only a temporary depression, and that sooner or later, in a healthier time of the national finances, the public will turn once more with avidity to those beautiful volumes, bound in every colour of the rainbow, with which our teeming presses are full. Just at present it cannot be denied that we are rather in a pessimistic vein about literature. Mr. Andrew Lang made a speech recently in which he uttered anything but a pæan of triumph over the profession of letters. And it may be also that, conscious as we are of the death of two great Victorian writers—Swinburne and Meredith—we feel that a great era has closed, and that we have lapsed on poorer, humbler times. Literature, shortly, seems to be in a state of suspended animation.

You know that round the coast of Brittany, as also around many of the coasts of our own island, there is a tradition of towns buried beneath the sea; and the wanderer along these coasts, if he happens to be of a romantic and meditative turn, will fancy that about sunset he hears, far below the waves, the faint sound of the church bells ringing for vespers. And the tradition always includes the theory that someone will come along, some magician, or possibly some statesman, or priest, some military conqueror, who, by exercise of his magic arts, will drive back the waters, and enable the submerged city once more to look into the eye of the sun. For some of us this is a parable of the present condition of literature. It, too, sleeps, and only the student or the bibliophile, the real lover of books, hears the mysterious sounds which show that still there is life within the buried city of letters. And the hope, the faith, the certainty, still survives that some great literary enchanter will come, who will show us once more all the beautiful streets, the ordered ways, the magnificent edifices, the gorgeous vistas of our buried city of literature. Literature, like other things, has its rising and its setting tides. Periods of stirring political or practical activity are not those, as a rule, in which the highest literary work is done. Meanwhile, we make up in quantity for what we possibly lack in quality. Never was a technical ability to write more widely extended. There is hardly a book you take up which does not show a very considerable aptitude for letters. The inspiration, the supreme, unique inspiration, may be wanting; but meanwhile we have wonderfully diffused throughout the community of letters the power to compose, the power to write, the ability to produce something which is too good to be forgotten six months after its appearance. (Hear, hear.)

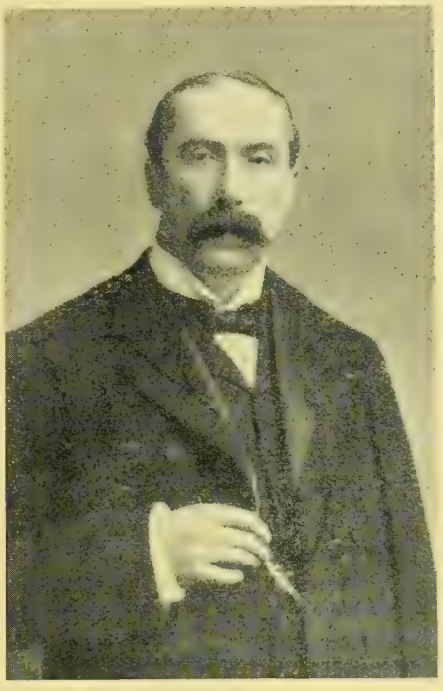
There is another thing, too, which is, perhaps, the most conspicuous feature of the day. You, who handle books, know at what extraordinarily cheap rates are produced, for a generation that lacks, to some extent, the creative impulse, the classical masterpieces of the past. Every day fresh series of literary masterpieces are being put on the market, and men and women can buy for fourpence, or sixpence, or ninepence, or one shilling, the things which are of eternal glory to our English literature. It is no good declaring ours to be an unliterary age so long as this phenomenon endures. Somebody must buy these cheap masterpieces, or else they would not be produced; and if they buy them—whoever it may be that are the purchasers, whether it be the artisan, or the workman, or, here and there, by some lucky accident, a few members of the aristocratic and leisured class—at all events, there is this great sale going forward, and the spirit of mighty books is abroad throughout the land.

Books are of various kinds. There are the books which are no books, the βίβλια ἀβιβλια of which Charles Lamb was fond of talking. There are the books which are like household words to us all, the books you keep at your bedside, the books you turn to on sleepless nights, the books which open of their own accord at the old familiar page, the books which the reader can begin anywhere, because he knows them so well, and has treasured them amongst his unforgotten memories. There are no such friends as these books. They never change their pleasing aspect when you come home to them. They are never fickle or quarrelsome. They respond to every mood. If you are angry, you find in them material to feed your anger; and if you are happy they will give you still further reasons for your happiness; and if things have gone wrong with you, the old familiar books will give you the ready sympathy of their tears. They are the only things that teach you without the rod or the ferule of the schoolmaster. They are not asleep when you call upon them. If you ask them questions they conceal nothing from you. If you mistake them they never grumble. If you are ignorant and stupid, they at least neither will nor can laugh at you. That is why, to those of us who handle books because we love them, the possession of them is not a luxury, but a necessity. For we have come to the serene consciousness that without them life would be intolerable. Vita sine literis mors est: Life without letters is death. (Applause.)

LORD GUTHRIE, in proposing the toast of "Art," said: Mr. Chairman, I am honoured to propose to-night the toast of "Art." The difficulty is how to define, how to delimit my theme. The term is usually applied to painting and sculpture. If that were an exhaustive enumeration, our country would historically rank below France and Germany, Italy and Spain. Down to the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries there were no great painters in Scotland or Ireland, and only two in England, one made in Germany and the other in Flanders—Holbein in the reign of Henry VIII. and Vandyke under Charles I. You remember how the English nobles complained of Holbein's insolence and demanded his expulsion. "No, no," said Henry; "I can make any number of you fellows, but I cannot make another Hans Holbein." Then came the glorious outburst in the Eighteenth Century. Talk of the three "R's" in education, think of them in painting!—Reynolds, Romney and Raeburn, not to speak of Gainsborough, Constable, Turner and half a dozen more. And in the Nineteenth Century, as in the present century, we have no cause to fear comparison with any other country. But if we had no painters before the Sixteenth Century we were not without Art—and that of the highest order. It is no paradox to say that the noblest works of Art in England are not to be found in her castles or on the walls of her picture galleries; they stand, stately and eternal, in the cathedrals and abbeys, which are England's chiefest glory.

To-night, however, I will use the word Art in a sense wide enough to embrace us all, whether book-makers, book-producers or booksellers, whether solicitors, barristers or judges, whether shopkeepers, bankers or manufacturers. In all these occupations you have some men who are mere mechanics and others who are true artists. The difference may be difficult to define, but we have no trouble in distinguishing the two when we meet them in daily life.

In the House of Lords and the House of Commons, contrast the ordinary smug exponent of the obvious with two men I shall name. It is not their own fault, but they are both Scotsmen. Contrast the dull level of the ordinary uninspired speaker with such a master of effective speech as Lord Rosebery; or, when he chooses to take the trouble (which is not always), his brother Scot, Mr. Arthur Balfour. It's the same in your own trade. I know booksellers' shops with no evidences of individuality whatever on their shelves or in their windows; there is no distinct personality behind the counter, but only a man who might just as well be selling boots and shoes or sausages and haggis! (Laughter.) On the other hand, any big town in the country has men in your business into whose shops men go—not merely to buy books, but to talk about books. Even on the lowest ground I am sure the highest view of business pays. Into the first class of shop we go for five minutes to spend five shillings, and we do not stay a moment longer or spend a copper more than we can help. In the second class, whatever our original intentions may have been, we linger for fifty minutes and we spend five pounds.



Lastly, what a delight it is on the public platform, albeit a rare one, to meet the truly artistic speaker. Samuel Johnson said of a poem of Alexander Pope that it was characterised by poverty of thought and vulgarity of sentiment, relieved by felicity of language. The first part of that criticism applies to the dreary lecturer; but not the second. From such we turn with delight to such men as the author and lecturer whose name I have the honour to couple with the toast of "Art"—Mr. Arthur Diósy. (Hear, hear.) He is a great authority on Japanese Art, and he has enriched our literature; but I do not think you can know what a perfect artist he is unless you have heard him, as I have, on the platform, any more than you can realise the interest of his personality unless you have met him in private. Ladies and Gentlemen, I give you the toast of "Art," coupled with the name of Mr. Diósy. (Applause.)

MR. ARTHUR DIÓSY, in replying to the toast, said he had wondered what in the name of all that was reasonable could procure him the great honour that had fallen to him of being selected to respond to the toast of "Art." After turning over many reasons in his mind, he had found only one valid one, which he believed to be the true reason—namely, that the eminent Royal Academician who sat next but one to him on his left (Mr. Seymour Lucas) had recently suffered from a sore throat, and was under medical orders not to speak in public. It became necessary to select somebody in his stead, and he imagined that why the honour had fallen to him was, perhaps, because he was a past President of Ye Sette of Odd Volumes, that very bookish Society which included in its ranks several eminent artists, or perhaps it might be because of his intimate connection with the fair land of Japan, with that nation of true artists. As they probably all knew, in Japan the people breathed Art, lived Art. In Japan, Art was not the luxury of a few, but the heritage of the whole nation.

He would give them just one instance to bring this home to their minds. He remembered once, in a country walk in Japan, he heard an altercation proceeding between two labourers in a field, who had started a noisy discussion—a surprising fact in that land of soft and gentle manners, where the policeman apologises to the pickpocket for arresting him and the pickpocket apologises to the policeman for giving him the trouble of arresting him. So he (the speaker) stopped to hear what it might all be about. What did they think it was? These two labouring men, ordinary day-labourers, were quarrelling as to the aspect of a tree that stood by the boundary of the field, one maintaining that, if the branches of that tree had a slightly upward tendency instead of spreading out horizontally from its bole, the aspect of the tree would have been much more satisfactory to his æsthetic conception. The other man maintained the opposite. Now, could they imagine Giles and "Geaarge" ceasing from hedging and ditching to discuss a similar question? Again, as they probably knew, in Japan one of the chief amusements of all classes of the nation, from the Emperor downwards, was writing poetry. The Japanese working-class family of about the same social standing as that of the honest chimney-sweep in this country, would spend their evening, time and time again, in composing little poems. So did some British families, adopting the Limerick metre; but that was done in the hope of financial gain. One of the chief reasons, he thought, for the marvellous æsthetic spirit of the Japanese nation was that Japanese mothers tried to imbue their children with a love of the beautiful. They tried to make their children look only at beautiful things. That system might perhaps be adopted in this country, but under very great difficulties. There were still so many early Victorian objects surviving—(laughter)—and there were also so many public statues about our squares and streets. In Japan they were more susceptible, because every single article used in their households was a thing of beauty. An article that cost half a farthing in Japan was a work of art, because it was beautiful of line, smooth to the touch, and, what was most important, absolutely suitable for the purpose for which it was intended.

He feared he was wandering a little from his proper theme, which was to thank them for the kind way in which they had drunk the toast of "Art." He might say that Art was very much obliged to them, because it was at the present moment in many respects in a condition in which it needed its health to be improved. But there were some branches of it that were doing very well just now, probably better than they had ever done before in this country, especially one branch in which they were much interested. He meant book illustration. That had certainly made great progress. Nowadays, books were produced with illustrations far superior to what was the case a few years ago. He feared that they might go to the other extreme, and be suffering from a little over-illustration. A little while ago he had to do with a publication that came out in parts, and it was largely advertised by its owners and publishers, as having a picture on every page—"ten thousand pictures on ten thousand pages." He soon realised that he had not really entered into a contract to write a certain historical work, but merely to supply letter-press to prevent the pictures from overlapping. That, of course, was a great success, he was informed that half a million copies were sold; but he fancied it was not a very great compliment to the reading public, treating them as the American railroad newsboy did the obdurate passenger who refused to buy his wares. "We have picture papers for them as can't read!" said the newsboy, with bitter irony. (Laughter.) There was no denying that certain branches of Art had made great progress, and they were doing their share in making it more widely known, by bringing it within the reach of all classes. He would say that if they would encourage Art, Art on its part strove to fulfil its great mission of making the lives of men and women more beautiful and happier.

Mr. A. E. W. MASON, M.P., in giving the toast of "The Press," thought they would understand that if he was brief in proposing the toast, it was not through any disrespect for the Press, but rather as an attribute to its domestic qualities. It was usual in proposing that toast to begin with rather a hushed voice, with an attribute to the power, the vitality, and the assiduity of, and then, as one's voice strengthened, to go on to lecture the Press upon what it should do and how it ought to do it. He did not propose to take the first course, because evidences of the power of the Press had been very prominent before the nation during the last few weeks. They had had the brethren of the Press in Great Britain bringing over to these shores their brethren from distant parts of the Empire. Their vitality had been shown clearly enough by their endurance of long conferences, of speeches by the most notable men. The subjects ranged from the thorny one of the connection between journalism and literature to the less thorny subject of the advisability of reducing cable rates. He felt that all who were concerned with books, whether in selling or producing or writing them, had every reason to be grateful to the Press of this country; for they brought to the consideration of the books put before them a catholicity of judgment and of taste which was not always so apparent in those who criticised other forms of art. He thought the critics of books, in their consideration of them, looked more particularly to the instance, the example, than the type; and his hearers would all agree that in that the critics were right; for in all art it was, after all, the example and not the type that ultimately counted. Further, they found the Press generous to young authors because they were beginners, and generous to older authors because they had known them for so long. With the toast he joined the name of one who was well known to them, Mr. T. P. O'Connor. (Applause.) Whenever he looked at Mr. O'Connor he always wondered how he did it! Mr. O'Connor always looked so well; he always seemed to spend sixteen hours a day. But he was certainly a critic to whose catholicity of judgment many an author there present had reason to be grateful. He therefore coupled his name with the toast with the very greatest pleasure.

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P., in reply, hoped they would take it from him that he had prepared that evening the speech of his life. As time went on, as he heard so many pretty things, he began to get humbler and humbler, and he observed the audience was also looking humbler and humbler, so he could not part with this immortal and memorable utterance; however, they must take that great speech of his as unspoken, but destined to be delivered at some future time. He happened to be speaking to his old friend Mr. Courtney the other day on the question of literature and the Press; and he observed that night Mr. Courtney kept quite clear of the vexed theme of the Press and literature. Speaking to an audience of publishers and booksellers he did not know whether he was speaking to an audience of friends or enemies. He knew that the Press owed a good deal to them. Occasionally he passed something like a delicate suggestion or sometimes even an indelicate warning that the Press was rather intruding upon the domain of the book by a certain generosity of expiry. (Laughter.) Well, he did not know whether they should debar that as a platitude; he dare say occasionally they might have some reason to complain with the Press. On one occasion he received a request from half a dozen authors that he might concern himself to his heart's content with making as many extracts as he could from their books, always on the strict condition that these extracts would be in as prominent and public a part of the newspaper as possible. (Laughter.) That reminded him of an old solicitor, a countryman of his own. The paper had uttered some observations of a somewhat drastic character. A man came to him in a great state to demand that there should be a retractation. The retractation should appear in the next day's issue. The next day's issue came. In a little two-line paragraph on the last ultimate line, that preceded the advertisements, the retractation was contained. The calumniator came in next day more furious than ever. "Where is the retractation?" "The retractation, sir," said the sub-editor, "was in yesterday's paper." "Yesterday's paper," he said, "I wanted it in a conspicuous position!" "Sorry, there is no position in the field of journalism that is not conspicuous." (Laughter.) He (Mr. O'Connor) was rather inclined to give that answer to his friends. The press review was, he thought, a prominent and welcome feature of every daily and weekly newspaper; and he thought also it reached to a domain of more rationale than it occupied half or three-quarters of a century ago. For instance, anyone who now wrote in the way in which the "Quarterly" Reviewer and the "Empire" Reviewer used to write, would be dismissed by any decent self-respecting journal. Indeed, he thought he might say that most of the reviews of twenty-five to thirty years ago in so excellent a paper as the "Saturday Review" were entirely outside the prevalent tone of the Press to-day. Criticism was now understood in its real self. Criticism in the old days meant simply a severe dissection, mainly with the object of showing how insignificant a kind of fellow the writer was. Nowadays criticism had reached to the more catholic view that it was as much the duty of the critic to have mind and brains as it was to find fault. At that late hour he would only further say that the booksellers, the publishers, and the newspaper proprietors had a great and beautiful bond of sympathy between them.

Mr. JOHN MURRAY asked to be allowed to express the thanks which he knew they all felt to Mr. Truslove for occupying the chair. (Applause.)

The CHAIRMAN responded, and hoped he would have the opportunity of welcoming them again.

During the evening great pleasure was afforded by the charming selection of songs. Mr. Patrick Kirwan directed the musical arrangements and Mr. Herbert L. Cooke accompanied at the piano.

The Service in Westminster Abbey

By One Who Was There

ONE of our readers writes:—

"I don't know whether you were present at the Service in Westminster Abbey on Sunday morning; but if not I think you should put on record such an unprecedented event in the history of the book trade. Surely those present had good reason to rejoice that they rose betimes so as not to miss any of it. It certainly is a thing to be glad of, to have heard in the clear and distinct voice of the Bishop of Peterborough resounding through the historic Abbey. 'The Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland as an incorporated body have to-day come to this old Abbey to worship God. I am sure we all welcome them.'

There, environed by the tombs and memorials of the illustrious great in Literature, Science and Art, were most appropriately assembled the luminaries of the book trade from all parts of the Kingdom whose lives are spent in spreading the works of the great departed far and wide. There they sat among the congregation in that noble Abbey, handsome faces expressive of intelligent devotion—let us hope joining in the beautiful prayer—'And we also bless thy Holy Name for all thy servants departed this life.'

The faces we have often times seen masked by mercantile austerity now beaming with a genial expression of brotherly love as if no thoughts of discounts or deductions would ever again disturb their serenity.

We often hear tell of the superiority of the booksellers of fifty years ago. Well, I never assented to that. I remember some of the men of old. I don't believe any of them would have bestirred themselves to go as a body to Westminster Abbey to worship God and breathe brotherly love to one another.

And outside afterwards the greetings and introductions one to another warmed the hearts and cemented friendships let us hope to last for many years."

Sir Frederick Bridge, M.A., Mus.Doc., was the organist.

STOP PRESS PARAGRAPH

WE stop the Press to congratulate Mr. Hubert Harry Longman, of Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co., on the honour of having been appointed a Baronet by His Majesty the King; and we are also very glad to see that Mr. Henry W. Lucy, of Punch, has been Knighted.

The Publishers' Association Reception at the White City

THE Publishers' Association Reception at the White City on Monday last was an unqualified success, nearly five hundred publishers and booksellers, with their wives and daughters, being present. The reception took place in the Sports Café in the Court of Arts, and Mr. William Heinemann, supported by Mr. Edward Bell and Mr. Arthur Waugh, cordially received the guests.

It is not necessary to give a list of those present, but practically all who were at the dinner on the previous Saturday were to be found at the most pleasant gathering. Everybody seemed to thoroughly enjoy the affair, and it was indeed a great pleasure to meet people whose names were familiar through correspondence over many years, and, as one well-known Scottish bookseller remarked, "It was good to have the opportunity of shaking hands with and speaking to the men with whom one had had pleasant business relations."

The Committee and Secretary of the Publishers' Association did all that was possible for the comfort and convenience of their guests, they spared no pains to make everyone feel at home. The afternoon was fine and the Sports Café a delightful place for such a reception.

The lavish supply of refreshments was greatly appreciated, and the music which was played from four to six o'clock gave a final touch to a brilliant scene. By the special consent of His Grace, the Duke of Devonshire's Eastbourne Orchestra rendered the excellent programme of music given at the end of this report. Mr. P. Tas was the conductor, with Mr. Sidney Freedman, L.R.A.M., as leader. The Publishers' Association are to be congratulated on their choice of orchestra.

After the reception the guests dispersed, many spending the evening in the Exhibition and grounds.

A Day at Letchworth with the Associated Booksellers

A LARGE party, numbering about two hundred, of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, together with their wives and daughters, journeyed to Letchworth on Tuesday at the invitation of Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son.

A special train of saloon carriages, leaving King's Cross at 10.25 a.m., conveyed the party to Letchworth, arriving at the Garden City soon after eleven o'clock. Messrs. Dent and Hornby (Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son) welcomed the visitors. After a short address relative to the aims, objects and achievements of the first Garden City Co., Ltd., delivered by its Chairman (Mr. Aneurin Williams) from the eminence of a wooden paling, the party moved over the trestle bridge to twenty brakes, which had been placed at the hosts' disposal by the Garden City Co. In these the booksellers and their friends made a very imposing procession round and through the estate, although at first the effect was somewhat marred by a sharp and, happily, short rain-shower. But the sun shone out and revealed the beauties of the estate, to the delight of the party, who, loud in their expression of such delight, plied the guide (provided with each brake) with questions which evidenced the interest aroused.

The drive terminated at the Letchworth Hall Hotel (a magnificent old building, fronted by a lovely lawn and surrounded by old-world gardens). On a lawn at the side a large marquee had been erected, and within this at one o'clock the company, with appetites sharpened by the long ride, sat down to a most excellent cold luncheon. Space will not permit a description of the menu; it must suffice to repeat that it was excellent in every way and that full justice was done to it.

A simple grace was said by Mr. J. M. Dent, and during the luncheon short speeches were delivered by various gentlemen. The first was from Mr. Dent, who thanked the company for its presence and expressed the hope that the visit would not be devoid of interest and some charm. He was followed by Mr. Aneurin Williams, who, apologising for speaking a second time in the day, amplified his previous remarks (necessarily brief because of the rain) with regard to the Garden City Co. and its aspirations. Mr. E. Howard (the promoter of the Garden City Scheme) next spoke, and referred to the co-operation of Messrs. Dent and W. H. Smith & Son, and other large employers of labour, who had realised the true spirit of the Garden City Movement by the construction of model workshops. He described the Garden City as an encyclopædia (a simile which caused his audience to titter)—an encyclopædia of the science of engineering, surveying and building on a scale and with a purpose which had never before been attempted.

Mr. TRUSLOVE followed with an amusing little speech, in which he confessed that when Messrs. Dent published Shakespeare in their "Classics" he was not only astonished, but disappointed, for they had anticipated him in what was then his pet project. But the disappointment had long since vanished, and he was truly glad to find that the sales of the Classics had justified the promoters and proved that the public possessed discernment and a taste for the best in literature. He concluded his speech with the remark that he thought it time to do so, as he noticed the Chairman of the Associated Booksellers (Mr. Keay) was "burning with eloquence" and did not desire to stand between that gentleman and his expectant audience.

Mr. KEAY, on rising, denied that he was burning with eloquence, and prefaced his remarks with the time-honoured apology, "Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking"—a remark particularly inapplicable to the speaker and one which caused a good deal of amusement, which was supplemented by roars of laughter when Mr. Keay completed his sentence and said, "in buildings of this kind!" Mr. Keay was commendably brief but inspired, and voiced in all sincerity the thanks of the guests for the lavish hospitality extended them by all who had shared in making their programme so delightful and so admirably managed. He laughingly referred to Mr. Howard's remarks about the estate representing an encyclopædia of the sciences, and reminded his hearers that there were encyclopædias and encyclopædias; they had heard of some which were not wanted, some which were out of date and which the public found of no use because no use was to be found therein! Encyclopædias, to be of value, must be up-to-date, and from what he had seen and heard that day he believed they would agree that the Garden City was up-to-date, met a long-felt want, and was a worthy enterprise which deserved every support and encouragement.

Luncheon over, the party inspected the adjacent Parish Church (dating from the twelfth century), and then drove off to view the workshops of Messrs. Dent and W. H. Smith & Son. At the latter, binding in all its stages was in progress, and being free to roam, those interested visited the various benches and were afforded every facility for obtaining information and instruction. Messrs. Dent's workshops presented a contrast, for whereas the work at Messrs. W. H. Smith's is all done by hand, that at Messrs. Dent's is mostly performed by machinery of a costly and intricate description. The famous "Classics" and "Everyman" Series are set up, printed and bound complete here, and the whole operation was watched with great interest. The Monotype machines were very attractive and shared the honours with the blocking, case-making and stitching machines upstairs. Mr. J. M. Dent and his son, Mr. Hugh Dent, were kept busy answering queries, and astonished their questioners with the prodigious totals of the output of the various books bearing their imprint.

From 3.30 to 4 o'clock tea was dispensed in the large workers' room attached to the building, Mrs. Hugh Dent presiding and assisted by a number of the work-girls, to all of whom the thanks of the company were accorded.

After tea, visits were paid by those interested to the Garden City Press Co-partnership Printing Works and to Messrs. Hunters' Tapestry and Silk Weaving Looms. At 5.18 p.m. the special train left for London, arriving at King's Cross soon after six o'clock.

Thus concluded a day which will be not the least memorable among the pleasant and profitable days which have fallen to the lot of those privileged to enjoy them.

British Museum Prints

AT Bow Street, before Mr. Marsham, John Peter Coster, 51, a surgical instrument maker, of Auckland Hill, West Norwood, was charged on remand with stealing nine prints, worth £2 5s., from books in the reading room of the British Museum. The case was reported in The Times of June 14th.

The prisoner was now also charged with stealing nine prints, value £3, which, it was alleged, had been cut from several of the British Museum books, including Kennett's "History of England," Hearn's "Antiquities of Great Britain, 1807," Keating's "History of Ireland, 1723," and Carter's "Specimens of Ancient Sculpture and Painting, 1780." Three of these plates were stated to have been pledged by the prisoner for 2s. 6d.

The prisoner said that he had been a reader at the Museum for thirty-two years, and he now held a life member's ticket. He admitted having cut two prints from books in the reading room; but he had been suffering from brain fever and was not in his right mind at the time. He bought the other prints at auction sales. It was a coincidence that these prints fitted the cut pages of the books at the British Museum.

The magistrate sentenced the prisoner to three months' imprisonment in the second division.—The Times.

Table Talk of a Book Collector

WHEN speaking of booksellers' catalogues I am not sure that I properly emphasised what I am sure is an important point, viz.: that they should leave a large part of the cover blank, and not occupy it all with descriptive matter. The first thing the tentative, hesitating bookbuyer does when he has been just enough attracted by the document to begin to read it (after perhaps glancing at two or three others and throwing them into the waste-paper basket) is to look round for a blank scrap of paper on which to write down the number of the first item that arrests his attention. If he does not find that, and find it quickly—by so thin a thread does business often hang—he will very often drop the catalogue as a fretful barbel discards (oh how often!) the mouthed and mumbled worm, before he is hooked.

MR. JAS. MACLEHOSE

A small point, but in establishing a connection (excellent term!) nothing—certainly nothing that costs so little trouble—should be disregarded. The thread will carry a string, the string a cord, the cord a rope, and the rope a cable that years of wear will never break. Verb sat sap.

I was about to speak of George Meredith, or rather to join in the general conversation about him which has prevailed for the past fortnight.

To contend that this great writer was widely read would, of course, be an absurdity.

That such an author should command the buying public of Kipling, Hall Caine, Marie Corelli, or H. G. Wells would mean no less than an inversion of the cone of our national civilisation.

But it may certainly be claimed that he was, and is read and it may be added with more certainty than of any modern writer that he demands reading and re-reading, and that, to those destined to enjoy him, every work reveals new subtleties of beauty and interest on each perusal.

"Not Widely but Well,"

Of the solid hold that he had laid upon the more educated English public, I believe there is abundant evidence in the practical and increasing demand for the ordinary "blue cloth" edition of his novels. Poor as is their appearance and "get up," these have come to possess a real second-hand value, which surely is the "bedrock" test of practical utility in a book.

The green cloth edition (identical in type but on better paper) is, of course, much more attractive. Then there are the charming pocket editions issued by Messrs. Constable.

And the Edition de luxe, which one would fancy is, in Stock Exchange parlance, tolerably "well held."

Surely never did any classical fiction so clamour for the luxurious claritude, the intellectual elbow-room of the "library edition." Even on that fair highway the views are not always unobstructed, but when it comes to pursuing even the most precious literary bird of paradise through a jungle of small type (or what looks like it), why then——

The boy ran off "and in going taught a lesson to the lightning." . . . "The nervous and intellectual halves of her (Diana) clashed together like cymbals." Many an honest and well meaning reader has been "choked off" by a few such phrases as these. The fact that the first is undoubtedly a careless scrap of "Americanism" may blind the eyes of many to the true poetic psychology of the second.

But it would be idle to pretend that what Meredith has to give us can be acquired on merely easy terms. That is scarcely conceivable. The true claim is that, like Nature and Art in themselves, his lucubrations will repay a great deal of trouble, to those who fancy this kind of spiritual investment, and these will be those who care for "the precious things of the soul," who can find in the profoundest studies that have yet been offered us of English character and society something more attractive than the most sanguinary sensation or the most paradoxical inversions of fact and nature.

And what such readers look for in Meredith it is at any rate certain they cannot dream of finding elsewhere. Comparisons are here altogether out of place and misleading. In the ripe age (overripe perhaps he thought it) of English civilisation, there has been one Meredith, just as there was one Froissart and one Shakespeare. To compare any work of any of our popular novelists to "Richard Feverel" or "The Egoist," would only be to bring it into ridicule.

There is perhaps nothing more remarkable about this author's genius than the sedulous fashion in which it puts aside all shallow artifices and vulgar attractions. Out of a fine shade of moral struggle, mental duplicity, or social embarrassment, such an artist makes a "sensation" for which your hack writer would have needed revolvers and bludgeons. That is what we call literary art.

ABERDEEN

An excursion in connection with the Aberdeen Booksellers and Newsagents Association took place recently to Grantown-on-Spey, and, favoured with brght sunshine, was greatly enjoyed by the members of the Association and their friends, numbering forty. A special saloon carriage was reserved for the party in the Speyside excursion train leaving at 1 p.m., and the otherwise complete arrangements made by the executive were greatly appreciated by the excursionists. The scenery along the route was favourably commented on as the train sped on its way, and in particular, the romantic region between Craigellachie and Grantown-on-Spey was greatly admired.

On arriving at Grantown a sumptuous repast was done ample justice to in the Palace Hotel. Thereafter Mr. A. Lovie Murray (of Messrs. A. and R. Milne), the President of the Association, appropriately addressed the gathering, and extended a hearty welcome to all present. Mr. Francis J. Scott, solicitor, the Secretary of the Association, read a number of apologies for absence, and announced that Mr. John Grant Smith, the factor for the Seafield estates, had kindly granted permission to view the grounds and some of the apartments at Castle Grant. Under the instructive guidance of Miss Duguid, the outstanding items of interest in the castle were shown to the visitors, who viewed with delight the great dining-room, with its paintings, and the fine collection of mediæval weapons. The library, with its well-stocked shelves, containing many rare and valuable publications, specially appealed to the booksellers present. On leaving the castle the members of the party were free to spend the time at their disposal according to their individual tastes, and were able to form a high opinion of Grantown as an ideal holiday resort, with its pine woods and invigorating hill air.

The success attending the outing (the first that has been held) led to the generally-expressed hope that an annual excursion might be arranged for in connection with the Association.

BATH

Of the current number of the local Beacon, containing an illustrated article on "The Coronation of King Edgar the Peaceable, at Bath, A.D. 973," by Mr. J. F. Meehan, upwards of 3,000 copies were disposed of within a few days of publication. It is now practically out of print. Mr. Meehan, as already announced, is reprinting this interesting series of "Episodes." They will be ready for distribution early in July.

The local "Historical Pageant" takes place from July 19th to 24th, so that the above contemplated booklet will be an excellent guide to that important event. It will contain eight "Episodes," and various unique illustrations from rare prints and from choice medallions in the possession of Queen Alexandra. Its price will be sixpence; cloth, one shilling.

Copies of Mr. Meehan's article on "The Coronation of King Edgar the Peaceable, at Bath, A.D. 973," have been accepted both by the King and Queen. Her Majesty the Queen, in her letter of acknowledgment, was graciously pleased to describe it as an "interesting article."

BRISTOL

Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, Quay Street, with the authority of the Lord Mayor and Corporation, has just published an Official Guide to the City of Bristol. It is comprehensive and up-to-date, and the contents include Lists of Corporation Officials and Freemen of the Borough, the City and County of Bristol, Ancient Buildings and Modern Bristol. The interest of the reading matter is enhanced by some fifty excellent portraits and pictures.

COLCHESTER

Mr. W. Gurney Benham has written the words, and Mr. Ernest H. Turner the music, to a song apropos of the Pageant held in the town. It is entitled "King Cole of Colchester." It is a rollicking song, with rollicking music, and copies can be obtained at any of Messrs. Jarrold & Sons' depots.

LIVERPOOL

Messrs. Henry Young & Sons have in the press, and will shortly publish for the Liverpool Corporation, a valuable guide to "The Jurisdiction and Practice of the Court of Passage of the City of Liverpool," by Walter Peel, registrar of the court. The book will contain a chapter on the jurisdiction and officers of the court, and practical directions as to the proceedings to be taken in an action. The rules and orders will be printed, with practical notes; and all the statutory enactments affecting the court will be given, in addition to the scales of fees and costs, precedents of bills of costs, &c.

OXFORD

Messrs. A. R. Mowbray & Co., 34, Great Castle Street, have just published a little booklet (price 2d.) entitled, "The Tourists' Church Guide for 1909." It contains a list of the principal churches in London and the country at which the Holy Communion is celebrated.

READING

The Right Hon. Augustine Birrell, M.P., Chief Secretary for Ireland, unveiled on Friday the 18th a memorial, in the form of a Celtic cross, of King Henry the First, Founder of Reading Abbey, which has been erected in the Forbury Gardens by Dr. Jamieson B. Hurry. In the course of an interesting and characteristic speech the author of "Obiter Dicta" referred to the booksellers of Reading. "Its bookshops," he said, "for which Reading was still famous, he recalled with gratitude, for the second-hand booksellers of Reading were amongst his earliest and most indulgent creditors, and he extended to them the thanks of a long life." Mr. Birrell was educated at Caversham, the small township which declines incorporation with Reading.

Mr. Thomas Thorp is issuing this week the second portion of his clearance catalogue, the works in which he is offering at the very liberal discount of fifty per cent. off the marked prices.

We regret to record the death of Alfred William Lawrence, elder son of Mr. Alfred James Lawrence, bookseller. Further particulars will be found under "Obituary."

YORK

On Friday, June 18th, the employés in the shop and printing works of Mr. C. L. Burdekin, bookseller, Parliament Street, York, had an enjoyable day's outing at Scarborough to celebrate the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Burdekin, and also the jubilee of Mr. Wm. S. Watson's connection with the firm. The weather was all that could be desired, and the principal places of interest were visited.

Mr. Burdekin, in a few well-chosen words, presented Mr. Watson with a beautiful solid silver cup, suitably inscribed, to commemorate his fifty years' service with the firm.

After a substantial tea a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. and Mrs. Burdekin for their generosity, and for the day's outing.

The return journey was commenced shortly before ten o'clock, all having thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

Authors and the Sevenpenny Novel

GREAT interest has been taken by novelists in the announcement made in The Standard of June 18th of the proposal of the publishers to enlist the co-operation of authors in fighting the early re-issue of new novels at sevenpence. The suggestion that authors should refuse to allow their works to reappear in cheap editions under a period of five years wins the acceptance of very few of the leading writers. The general view is that the matter does not enter the sphere of practical politics.

Obituary

WE regret to record the death, at Rugby, on Friday, June 18th, of Alfred William Lawrence, the elder son of Alfred James Lawrence, bookseller and publisher to Rugby and Repton Schools. Educated at Rugby, he started his business career at Leipzig, and afterwards joined his father at Rugby, identifying himself with the printing and publishing. His premature death at thirty-five, leaving a widow and one child, will be very much felt. The sad event prevented Mr. Lawrence from attending the Booksellers' Conference and supporting Mr. Bryce's proposition re discount to schools.

Macaulay's Wonderful Devotion to Literature

VALUABLE indeed is the privilege of following Macaulay through his favourite volumes, where every leaf is plentifully besprinkled with the annotations of the most lively of scholiasts; but it would be an injustice towards his reputation to separate the commentary from the text, and present it to the public in a fragmentary condition. Such a process could give but a feeble idea of the animation and humour of that species of running conversation which he frequently kept up with his author for whole chapters together. Of all the memorials of himself which he has left behind him, these dialogues with the dead are the most characteristic. The energy of his remonstrances, the heartiness of his approbation, the contemptuous vehemence of his censure, the eagerness with which he urges and reiterates his own opinions, are such as to make it at times difficult to realise that his remarks are addressed to people who died centuries, or perhaps tens of centuries, ago. But the writer of a book which had lived was always alive for Macaulay. This sense of personal relation between himself and the men of the past increased as years went on—as he became less able and willing to mix with the world, and more and more thrown back upon the society which he found in his library. His way of life would have been deemed solitary by others, but it was not solitary to him. While he had a volume in his hands he never could be without a quaint companion to laugh with or laugh at; an adversary to stimulate his combativeness; a counsellor to suggest wise or lofty thoughts, and a friend with whom to share them. When he opened for the tenth or fifteenth time some history, or memoir, or romance—every incident, and almost every sentence of which he had by heart—his feeling was precisely that which we experience on meeting an old comrade, whom we like all the better because we know the exact lines on which his talk will run. There was no society in London so agreeable that Macaulay would have preferred it at breakfast or at dinner to the company of Sterne, or Fielding, or Horace Walpole; and there were many less distinguished authors with whose productions he was very well content to cheer his repasts . . . .

Of the feelings which he entertained towards the great minds of bygone ages it is not for anyone except himself to speak. He has told us how his debt to them was incalculable; how they guided him to truth; how they filled his mind with noble and graceful images; how they stood by him in all vicissitudes—comforters in sorrow, nurses in sickness, companions in solitude, "the old friends who are never seen with new faces; who are the same in wealth and in poverty, in glory and in obscurity." Great as were the honours and possessions which Macaulay acquired by his pen, all who knew him were well aware that the titles and rewards which he gained by his own works were as nothing in the balance compared with the pleasure which he derived from the works of others. That knowledge has largely contibuted to the tenderness with which he has been treated by writers whose views on books and events, and politics past and present, differ widely from his own. It has been well said that even the most hostile of his critics cannot help being "awed and touched by his wonderful devotion to literature." And, while his ardent and severe passion for letters has thus served as a protection to his memory, it was likewise the source of much which calls for admiration in his character and conduct. The confidence with which he could rely upon intellectual pursuits for occupation and amusement assisted him not a little to preserve that dignified composure with which he met all the changes and chances of his public career, and that spirit of cheerful and patient endurance which sustained him through years of broken health and enforced seclusion. He had no pressing need to seek for excitement and applause abroad when he had beneath his own roof a never-failing store of exquisite enjoyment. That "invincible love of reading," which Gibbon declared that he would not exchange for the treasures of India, was with Macaulay a main element of happiness in one of the happiest lives that it has ever fallen to the lot of a biographer to record.—From Sir George Otto Trevelyan's "Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay."

Cricket in the Trade

PHILOTESIE C.C. v. RAPHAEL HOUSE C.C. THE above game, played on the former's ground at Devonshire Hill on Saturday, June 19th, resulted in a victory for the home team, the scores being:—Philotesie, 89; Raphael House, 50. For the victors W. Tacey (37) and W. Colbert (18) were prominent in batting, while A. Savill rendered good service by taking 7 wickets for 32 runs. For Raphael House E. Sanders (18 not out) and M. Flatau (13) batted well.

Fashionable Life and Intellectual Life

THERE is a degree of incompatibility between the fashionable and the intellectual lives which makes it necessary, at a certain time, to choose one or the other as our own. There is no hostility, there need not be any uncharitable feeling on one side or the other; but there must be a resolute choice between the two. If you decide for the intellectual life you will incur a definite loss to set against your gain. Your existence may have calmer and profounder satisfactions, but it will be less amusing and even in an appreciable degree less human—less in harmony, I mean, with the common instincts and feelings of humanity. For the fashionable world, although decorated by habits of expense, has enjoyment for its object and arrives at enjoyment by those methods which the experience of generations have proved most efficacious. Variety of amusement, frequent change of scenery and society, healthy exercise, pleasant occupation of the mind without fatigue—these things do indeed make existence agreeable to human nature, and the science of living agreeably is better understood in the fashionable society of England than by laborious students and savants. The life led by that society is the true heaven of the natural man, who likes to have frequent feasts and a hearty appetite, who enjoys the varying spectacle of wealth and splendour and pleasure, who loves to watch from the Olympus of his personal ease the curious results of labour in which he takes no part, the interesting ingenuity of the toiling world below. In exchange for these varied pleasures of the spectator the intellectual life can offer you but one satisfaction, for all its promises are reducible simply to this—that you shall come at last, after infinite labour, into contact with some great reality, that you shall know and do in such sort, that you will feel yourself on firm ground and be recognised, probably not much applauded, but yet recognised as a fellow-labourer by other knowers and doers. Before you come to this most of your present accomplishments will be abandoned by yourself as unsatisfactory and insufficient, but one or two of them will be turned to better account and will give you, after many years, a tranquil self-respect and, what is still rarer and better, a very deep and earnest reverence for the greatness which is above you. Severed from the vanities of the illusory, you will live with the realities of knowledge as one who has quitted the painted scenery of the theatre to listen by the Eternal ocean or gaze at the granite hills.—From "The Intellectual Life," by Philip Gilbert Hamerton.

The St. Catherine Press, Ltd., of 8, York Buildings, Adelphi, London, W.C., are issuing a list of important books for the autumn season, and have arranged with Messrs. Seven Errors in a List of Errata

In his preface to his translation of the "Life of the Duke of Espernon," Charles Cotton apologises for "Faults escap'd the Press, by what accident I know not," and he gives a list of them, adding, "the reader is desir'd to look over the errata, and to correct them with his pen, before he begins to read the book." As there are some two hundred of them, doubtless few readers took the trouble to do so. Those who did so must have been amused to find, as we have done, seven errors in the list of errata!

What is the most common printer's error? Will some printer's reader kindly tell us? One of the most common is mistaking an n in the MS. for a u, or a u for an n. This error accounts for a large proportion of those which Cotton asks his readers to correct. It is somewhat curious that he asks three times that "enough" should be altered to "enow."

How to Double Your Existence

As a matter of course, on this special "shelf in my bookcase" will be found Boswell's "Life of Johnson": a work in our literature unique, priceless. That altogether unvenerable yet profoundly venerating Scottish gentleman — that queerest mixture of qualities, of farce and weakness, blindness and insight, sanity and solid worth—has written the finest book of its kind which our nation possesses. It is quite impossible to overstate its worth. You lift it, and immediately the intervening years disappear, and you are in the presence of the Doctor. You are made free of the last century, as you are free of the present.* You double your existence. The book is a letter of introduction to a whole knot of departed English worthies. In virtue of Boswell's labours, we know Johnson—the central man of his time—better than Edmund Burke did, or Sir Joshua Reynolds; far better even than Boswell did. We know how he expressed himself, in what grooves his thoughts ran, how he dressed, how he ate, drank, and slept. Boswell's unconscious art is wonderful, and so is the result attained. This book has arrested, as never book did before, time and decay. Bozzy is really a wizard: he makes the sun stand still. Till his work is done, the future stands respectfully aloof. Out of ever-shifting time he has made fixed and permanent certain years, and in these Johnson talks and argues; while Burke listens, and Reynolds takes snuff, and Goldsmith, with hollowed hand, whispers a sly remark to his neighbour. There have they sat, these ghosts for seventy years now, looked at and listened to by the passing generations; and there they still sit, the one voice going on! Smile at Boswell as we may, he was a spiritual phenomenon quite as rare as Johnson. More than most he deserves our gratitude. Let us hope that when next Heaven sends England a man like Johnson, a companion and listener like Boswell will be provided. The Literary Club sits for ever. What if the Mermaid were in like eternal session, with Shakespeare's laughter ringing through the fire and hail of wit!—From "Dreamthorp: a Book of Essays written in the Country," by Alexander Smith.

Some Founders of the Associated Booksellers

In our notice last week of the Associated Booksellers we stated that we had been unable to obtain portraits of Messrs. Newton, Walsh, Waters, and W. G. Harrison. We have pleasure in giving our readers portraits of Mr. W. G. Harrison and Mr. T. A. Newton, and hope later on to be able to give some account of their careers.

We are extremely sorry that some of our readers misunderstood the paragraph and concluded that Mr. Newton had departed this life. He is indeed very much alive, and would like those who enquired after him to bear this fact in mind. He is a Director of Messrs. Peacock, Mansfield & Co., the well-known firm of book specialists in Paternoster Row, and so our implied statement that he had left the business of bookselling was not quite accurate.

Mr. T. A. NEWTON

We thank those of our readers who kindly pointed out that Messrs. Stott and Beeching are still connected with the book trade. Mr. Walsh, we understand, is dead, and Mr. W. G. Harrison has retired, and is resting on his well-earned laurels.

The many trade friends of Mr. H. A. Farley, of Messrs. Collins' Publishing Department, London and Glasgow, will regret to hear that through serious illness he is compelled to take a lengthened rest from business. All will unite in good wishes for his speedy recovery.

Trade Notes and Changes

Mr. Nelson Mattingley's friends in the country will be pleased to hear that he has secured the representation of Mr. John Lane in the Midlands, North, Scotland and Ireland, and of Messrs. Jarrold, H. R. Allenson and Ellis for the whole country. We congratulate Mr. Mattingley and wish him every success.

Messrs. George Allen & Sons beg to inform the trade that they have purchased the Publishing Department of Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, Ltd., of Snow Hill, London, as from July 1st next. In order to cope with this increase of business, Messrs. Allen are about to remove to more commodious premises, at Ruskin House, 44 and 45, Rathbone Place, Oxford Street.

Letters to the Editor

Cheap Fiction

Dear Sir,—In Mr. Bardsley's comments in to-day's "Circular" upon my letter which appeared in the issue of May 29th, he misquotes me, for I did not say, "that it is quite useless to fight against the latest craze"; what I did say was: "It is quite useless fighting against the 7d. or 1s. edition, because in this age of machinery it has become possible to produce a well-printed and strongly-bound book at 7d., with a profit to the publishers that satisfies them," and, judging from the long list of good novels which Messrs. Nelson have published at 7d., one would naturally suppose that they are satisfied with the results, or they would have discontinued them.

With reference to my suggestion of the new novel at 3s. net, just after posting my letter I had a chat on the subject with the representative of one of our oldest publishing firms, and he pointed out to me that a new novel, unless it had a very large circulation could not be made to pay at the suggested price. My proposal was more from the standpoint of the circulating library proprietor than of the bookseller, as the next paragraph of that letter shows.

If by the introduction of the 1s. and 7d. editions, the authors have practically killed the sale of the 6s. (4s. 6d.) one to the public, the libraries now being their best customers, they must be satisfied with a smaller royalty, or other profit, per copy sold, and publish at a cheaper net price in the first instance, to attract buyers other than the libraries.

I am quite prepared to admit that the public is willing to pay 4s. 6d. for the new books of the better known novelists, and there will always be a demand for a good novel at this price, but I am inclined to think that there would be a larger circulation at 3s. net, which in the long run would pay the author, publisher, and bookseller better, and provided there were no cheaper editions brought out for three or perhaps four years, the booksellers would be more disposed to stock them than at present.

I quite agree with Mr. Bardsley that, as regards the 7d. edition, from the booksellers' point of view, "the game is not worth the candle," for customers take nearly as long in deciding what to purchase at that price as they would do with a better edition, and having no more time for reading than formerly purchase very few additional books; but since these editions exist, it is hopeless for the bookseller to fight against the new order of things. It is now for the authors to decide whether to cater for the public or the libraries, and in catering for the former they will also receive the support of the latter.—Yours very truly,

WALTER RUCK.

Central Library, Maidstone.

On the Social and Intellectual Status of Booksellers

DEAR SIR,—May I send a few comments, based on my own experience, upon the interesting communication in this week's P.C.? Social status is earned by the most intellectual and best-educated members of the community. You can never win it by being merely a trader, however successful, as "success" is commonly understood. Hence the bookseller who desires to rank with the professional man must educate himself. Much correspondence has shown me that whereas the English bookseller rarely knows any language but his own, and often that very imperfectly, the German bookseller speaks and writes English as if he were a native, and, also, French. His general knowledge is encyclopædic, and thus he is able to produce catalogues which should be a source of envy and stimulation to his British confrères. One of his kind is now settled in England as a bookseller, and he tells me that in Germany an antiquarian bookseller holds a far higher place in general esteem than such persons, for instance, as bankers. This is a delightful pronouncement to be able to make about the most interesting occupation on earth. We cannot all of us be blessed with University training, but we can at least work in spare time, and equip ourselves as linguists, for in a twelvemonth a sufficient knowledge of French or German can be acquired for all ordinary business purposes. The chief object of my letter is, in fact, to advise all young beginners in bookselling to make a study of languages, so that they may never commit such a "howler" as the London dealer who once jumped to conclusions and catalogued an edition of the Gesta Romanorum under the heading "Roman Jests," or the other who described the Opera of a Roman classic as an "Old Opera."—Yours faithfully,

FRANK KARSLAKE.

Suggestions for a New Shakespeare from Canada.

SIR,—I believe that tho usand of readers throughout the world would welcome the publication of a cheap edition of the individual plays of Shakespeare on a plan which would fit them more completely to the pocket-companions than any of those hitherto produced. None of the editions, so far as I am aware, combine the following features, which, it seems to me, should all be found in a volume specially calculated for the use I have indicated :—

1. A legible type of reasonable size, on pages of such a size that a single play could be carried readily in a waistcoat pocket, if slightly more ample than usual. A surface of about 3½ in. (or 4 in.) by 6½ in. (or 6 in.) is suggested as suitable. But this is a mere matter of detail. Running over of lines must, of course, be avoided as far as possible. A reasonable margin should at all events be provided for memoranda.

2. Brief introductions, stating all that is known regarding the sources of the plots; incidents of production, &c. No originality need be attempted in these for the purposes of such an edition as that contemplated.

3. Some pages of extracts from the best criticisms which can be used without infringement of copyright.

4. Notes, very succinct, but giving sufficient information to meet the wants, not only of persons who already know their Shakespeare pretty well, but also of persons who bring to a first perusal of any given play the amount of knowledge imparted, let us say, by an average public school education. By avoiding all controversial and discursive treatment, and studying brevity in every way, a commentary adequate to light even the tyro through all the dark places could be supplied in a very small space.

5. A few blank leaves at the end of each volume.

What would be the minimum cost of such volumes, with a binding adapted to resist rough usage, I have no idea. But it is safe to say that if they could be produced on the plan thus outlined at a reasonable price—a shilling or less—the sale would be enormous.—I am, Sir,

Yours truly,

Toronto, C. B. LABATT.

[If no such edition of Shakespeare has been published as that suggested by our correspondent, we agree with him that it would be welcomed by many. Speaking from long experience of the way it resists wear in the pocket, as a covering for the Angler's Fly-Book, we should recommend pigskin as the material for binding this proposed Shakespeare in; it would also be a delicate compliment to the Baconians.—ED.]

"A Book is a Book"

WE confess a bibliothecarian avarice that gives all books a value in our eyes. There is for us a recondite wisdom in the phrase, "A book is a book," from the time when we made the first catalogue of our library, in which "Bible, large, 1 vol." and "Bible, small, 1 vol." asserted their alphabetic individuality, and were the sole B's in our little hive; we have had a weakness even for those checker-board volumes that only fill up; we cannot breathe the thin air of that Pepysian self-denial, that Himalayan selectness, which, content with one book-case, would have no tomes in it but porphyrogeniti books of the bluest blood, making room for choicer new comers by a continuous ostracism to the garret of present incumbents. There is to us a sacredness in a volume, however dull; we live over again the author's lonely labours and tremulous hopes; we see him, on his first appearance after parturition, "as well as could be expected," a nervous sympathy yet surviving between the late-severed umbilical cord and the wondrous offspring, doubtfully entering the Mermaid, or the Devil Tavern, or the Coffee-house of Will or Button, blushing under the eye of Ben Jonson, or Dryden or Addison, as if they must needs know him for the author of the "Modest Enquiry into the present State of Dramatique Poetry," or of the "Unities briefly Considered by Philomusus," of which they have never heard and never will hear so much as the names; we see the country gentlemen (sole cause of its surviving to our day) who buy it as a book no gentleman's library can be complete without; we see the spend-thrift heir, whose horses and hounds and Pharaonic troops of friends, drowned in a Red Sea of claret, bring it to the hammer, the tall octavo in tree-calf following the ancestral oaks of the park. Such a volume is sacred to us. But it must be the original foundling of the bookstall, the engraved blazon of some extinct baronetcy within its cover, its leaves enshrining memorial flowers of some passion which the churchyard smothered while the Stuarts were yet unkinged, suggestive of the trail of laced ruffles burnt here and there with ashes from the pipe of some dozing poet, its binding worn and weather-stained, that has felt the inquisitive finger, perhaps of Edmund Malone, or thrilled to the touch of Lamb, doubtful between desire and the odd sixpence. When it comes to a question of reprinting, we are more choice. The new duodecimo is bald and bare indeed compared with its battered prototype that could draw us with a single hair of association.—From "My Study Windows," by James Russell Lowell.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. George Allen & Sons.—"Songs of a Parish Priest," by the Rev. Basil Edwards, M.A. It goes without saying that the continued success of this book of poems may be chiefly attributed to their author's large and quick sympathies with, and insight into, objects "most prominently connected with sacred thought in a rural parish." This new fourth and enlarged edition should find a still wider acceptance among those solicitous for the welfare of honest Christian effort. The volume has now for frontispiece a good engraving of an ancient churchyard cross at Ashleworth, Gloucester.

From Mr. B. T. Batsford.—"The Arts connected with Building." Lectures on Craftsmanship and Design delivered at Carpenters' Hall for the Worshipful Company of Carpenters, edited by T. Raffles Davison. The lectures are by nine gentlemen prominently known for their study of practical craftsmanship in building work. The lectures are most excellent, conveying all that is known of the art of building, and with 98 beautiful illustrations the book is well worth purchasing by everyone who is interested in architecture and who thinks of building a house.

From The Cambridge University Press.—"The Epistles of Paul to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and to Philemon," edited by the Rev. W. K. Lowther Clark. This is one of the volumes of "The Revised Version for the Use of Schools," now being prepared under the editorship of the Rev. Arthur Carr. The Revised Version of the New Testament has not hitherto made much progress in the affections of the English people; but helpful little commentaries like this will do much to promote a better knowledge of it among the coming generation.——Of a less popular but extremely important character is the scholarly volume from the same publishers, "The Old Testament in Greek, Vol. 1, Part 2, Exodus and Leviticus," edited by the Rev. A. E. Brooke, B.D., and Mr. Norman McLean. The text is that of the Codex Vaticanus supplemented from other uncial manuscripts, and has at foot a most careful Apparatus Criticus of variants, from all the chief authorities for the text of the Septuagint.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—"A Royal Ward," by Percy James Brebner. Mr. Brebner has written an historical romance of unusual merit. His story has mystery, excitement, colour and romance in abundance, and the plot as it is gradually unwoven becomes positively thrilling; in addition, his pages are full of the atmosphere of the times with which he deals, and the dialogue is spirited and natural. The adventures of Lady Betty Walmisley take place in England, when Europe is in the throes of the Napoleonic wars. Victor Dubuisson makes a sympathetic and gallant hero, and Lady Betty herself has all the qualities and attractions of virtue, beauty and bravery. There is a wealth of incident, and the conflicting interests of passionate and ambitious men culminate in many fine and dramatic moments. The lives of the central characters are directly or indirectly affected by the French Revolution and the wars that followed it, and the picture Mr. Brebner draws is historically accurate and dramatically true.

From Mr. Horace Cox.—"The Field Record of Field Trials, 1908." This little handbook is admirably arranged, and the information is complete and accurate. It is arranged in three parts—pointers and setters, retrievers, and spaniels.

From Messrs. Edwin Dalton and Messrs. Hadley Brothers.—"The Fellowship Hymn Book." The remarkable growth within recent years of such movements as Adult Sunday Schools, Brotherhoods, Endeavour Societies, and the like, has naturally led to the demand for a hymn book suited for their special use. To meet this demand, this hymn book has been compiled by a Joint Committee of the Sunday School Unions and the P.S.A. Brotherhoods. The aim throughout has been to collect hymns of a strong and simple character which should express the ideals of men and women gathered together for worship, fellowship and inspiration for service. The book may be had in various forms from twopence up to (with tunes) three shillings.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—"London's Forest, its History, Traditions, and Romance," written and illustrated by Percival J. S. Perceval. A most enjoyable account of Epping Forest and the country round. It is enriched by thirty-nine excellent illustrations. It tells of the hunting of the Kings of England, and of the many customs of olden days, now no longer in vogue.

From Messrs. Everett & Co.—"Their Yesterday," by Beatrice C. Baskerville. A well-told tale of married life, but a sad one. We hope the authoress will make the next a novel with a happier story.

From the Same.—"Serle's Secret," by Florence Warden. Rather a sad story. A nice girl is forced by her parents to marry a man when she is in love with another, and shortly after marriage the husband goes mad. He nearly murders his wife, but fortunately she is saved by the man she ought to have married, and the husband the next day is drowned at sea. The novel is cleverly written, but too sorrowful.

From Messrs. Upcott Gill.—"Scotch and Irish Terriers," by Mr. J. Maxtee. This little book is on the same lines as Messrs. Gill's other popular shilling handbooks on kindred subjects. Besides Irish and Scottish terriers proper, it deals with Clydesdale, Dandie Dinmont, Skye, and other terriers of Scottish origin. It is written by an acknowledged expert, and is practical and complete.

The Independent Labour Party appear as the publishers of "Evolutionary Socialism," by Edward Bernstein, being Vol. 7 of "The Socialist Library." The German work, of which this is a translation by Miss E. C. Harvey, made much stir in Socialist circles on its first appearance ten years ago. It is an earnest advocacy of the policy of organising the working classes politically to fight for all kinds of reforms likely to benefit them, rather than endeavouring to bring about a sudden "social revolution," which the author evidently thinks a very visionary affair.

From Mr. John Long.—"The Red Hot Crown," by Dorothea Gerard. Recent events in the near East have, undoubtedly, been the source of inspiration for this political romance. Prince Bazyl Kornelowicz and his son, Marzian, are living in London as exiles from their native country of Moesia. Marzian is being brought up as an English gentleman—"the next best thing to being King of Moesia," and the Prince himself is immersed in the practice of Art. Father and son are visited by two influential Moesians, and to Marzian at least the visit is mysterious, though when later on the news comes of the murder of the Usurper and his foolish wife, the incident seems to have more significance. This is but the prelude to a rousing story of intrigue, in which love and ambition play their part. The plot is well managed, and the incidents are made real and credible.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—"A Commentary on the Holy Bible." Complete in one volume, edited by the Rev. J. R. Dummelow. A one-volume commentary on the Bible has long been wanted, and Mr. Dummelow has supplied the want in an admirable manner. He has enlisted the help of many well-known theological writers and scholars; and besides notes on each chapter of the sacred volume, he supplies a number of valuable introductions and articles on Biblical subjects. The tone of the whole is reverent without being superstitious. We have personally tested the work in various ways, and can confidently recommend it to clergy and ministers, and indeed to all careful readers of the Bible, as being, for convenience of reference and practical usefulness, far superior to any other similar work.

From Mr. Andrew Melrose.—"Adventures in Contentment," by David Grayson. Mr. Grayson is an American farmer, who cultivates his mind as well as his land. He thinks whatever he pleases, and whatever he thinks he writes down without apology: mainly in the form of conversations with casual visitors to his homestead. He has the art of inspiring others with his own love of whatever is beautiful in nature and in literature; and his pleasant chatty essays breathe the true Horatian spirit. The get-up of the book is handsome.

From the Same.—"Twenty-five Years' Soldiering in South Africa," by a Colonial Officer. It is twenty-eight years since the author of this lengthy volume landed in South Africa, anxious to join the Cape Mounted Riflemen. Since that date he has been through five campaigns, has passed twenty-five years in the country in military work, and has had adventures numberless. He is not a practised writer, and until quite recently the idea of becoming an author never entered his wildest dreams. His book, however, is none the worse for that; it is free from all "fine writing" and is never for one moment affected. On the contrary, the style, if a little stiff, is direct, forcible and sincere. "A Colonial Officer" has kept his eyes wide open, and though never a close student of politics, he has studied the various types of men with whom he has come in contact. If at the present moment some of his views are unpopular, they are nevertheless the expression of one who has seen and heard with his own eyes and ears. He thinks there can be "no true and permanent union of the two races i.e., Boer and British in South Africa," and he states with no little force and conviction that when the Dutch find the time ripe "they will throw off even the semblance of a British connection and at the same time throw overboard those whom they are now claiming as brothers."

From the Same.—"The Westminster New Testament: Thessalonians and Corinthians." With Introduction and Notes by Rev. Prof. R. Mackintosh, M.A., D.D. The admirably clear and scholarly notes of Dr. Mackintosh will be found serviceable by all students of the New Testament.

From Messrs. Mills and Boon, Ltd — "Elisabeth Davenay," by Mademoiselle C. de Pratz. This is a clever and well-written account of the life of a young French woman who has been trained in England. Elisabeth Davenay carries back with her to Paris, in addition to the unfettered ways of the English girl, an intense desire to reform society. She discusses the relations of men and women with men and women without reserve, and finally sacrifices her own heart and life on the altar of Woman's Rights. Perhaps the chief novelty in her method is that she sets out to attract men with her beauty and charm, in order to convert them to her ways of thinking. The book is evidently sincere, and the pictures of life in Paris—especially of the sordid grinding life of those women who have to work for a small wage in teaching or as doctors—is very ably done.

From the Same.—"The Captain's Daughter," by Helen H. Watson. Mrs. Watson is not concerned with problems, either psychological or sociological; she is simply a writer of excellent stories—stories full of human interest, real people, and everyday incident. This gift of story writing is at the root of all successful novels; Mrs. Watson has it in abundance. Constance has a rather ne'er-do-weel of a brother, who has an inordinate capacity for failing in his medical examinations; his love-affairs and her own form the material out of which the book is constructed, and the conclusion, threatened by tragedy, ends happily enough for all concerned.

From the Same.—"Miss Pilsbury's Fortune," by Christine Shand. A charming story, well written and interesting throughout. Novel readers will enjoy it more than most of the novels of the day. It could be put by and read again with pleasure in later days, for in addition to being a good story, well put together and with plenty of incidents, the characters are cleverly described and one's interest in them maintained to the end.

From the Same.—"The Veil," by E. S. Stevens. Miss Stevens has written a remarkable story, glowing with colour and warm with life and passion. The scene is laid in the Algerian Sahara, Tunis, and the sacred city of Kairouan; its motif is the conflict between Eastern and Western manners and education. The results of these conditions are chiefly personified in two figures: Si Ismael, a religious dreamer and revolutionary, and Mabrouka, a dancing woman and political spy, who can chatter French and has a liking for Parisian luxuries, but remains at heart a daughter of her own race. The keynote of the book, expressed in the title, is the fascination exercised over the imagination by the atmosphere of mystery in Eastern towns; the blank walls, the veiled women, the impassivity of the men, and their attitude towards questions of sex and religion.

From Mr. John Milne.—"The Awakening of Turkey: a History of the Turkish Revolution," by E. F. Knight. The famous War correspondent is well qualified to speak on things concerning the Turks and their national life, for his acquaintance with the near East dates from more than thirty years ago, and has continued with but little interruption down to the present time. His study of the rise of the young Turk movement leading up to the recent revolution is deeply interesting, and should do much to clear up misconceptions upon the matter. Niazi Bey is one of the heroes of the Young Turk party, and his diary of the adventures which befel him after he had hoisted the banner of revolt is one of the documents from which Mr. Knight has been able to draw data for the chapters dealing with the recent revolution. Like most of those intimately acquainted with the Turk, he has a sincere admiration for his many good qualities.

From the Same.—"'Neath Austral Skies," by Louis Becke. A book of stories, many of which tell of sailing about the South Sea Islands, of copal trading, of the catching of huge fish, of fights with man-eating sharks, of seashores on which poisonous sea-snakes abound, also the dreaded giant octopus, and under skies where few clothes are worn. The first story is of a cruel captain of a brigantine, which ends thus, after his fight with natives, "And the last that was seen of him was his battered and mutilated body being borne along the reef to be consigned to the cannibal ovens—a fitting end to a wicked and cruel life." Certainly there is no hesitation in this author's writing.

From Messrs. Mowbray & Co., Ltd.—"Everyman's History of the English Church," by the Rev. Percy Dearmer, M.A. In this timely volume we have a brilliantly written and charmingly illustrated sketch of the History of the Church of England from the modern point of view. Mr. Dearmer is well versed in the latest writings on the subject; and his presentation of (for instance) Edward VI.'s reign as one of ruinous iconoclasm, and of Archbishop Laud as the "Saviour of the English Church as we know it," while not likely to be acceptable to old-fashioned Church people, has a good deal of warrant from certain points of view. The book is certain to have a large sale.

From Messrs. Thomas Murby & Co.—"The Nation's Income," by F. W. Raffety and W. H. Cartwright Sharp, M.A., LL.B. This small handbook places before the citizen and the student of public affairs such first knowledge of the principles of taxation in this country as may enable them to understand the Nation's Accounts, and to judge political issues from that understanding. Separate chapters deal with the Nation's Revenue, the Principles of Taxation, the Nation's Debt, the Control of Expenditure, and so on.

From the Same.—"Macaulay the Essayist." Selections from the Essays and Miscellaneous Works of Lord Macaulay, edited by F. W. Raffety. These short, pithy and characteristic selections have been made with excellent judgment. Mr. Raffety has done his work in the belief that Macaulay's "Essays" are encumbered in many parts by references of the day and personalities "which a discriminating editor will have the courage to remove." There is a picture of Macaulay's statue at Trinity College, Cambridge, as frontispiece.

From Mr. Eveleigh Nash.—"The Mantle of Ishmael," by J. S. Fletcher. Richard Goulburn, a City clerk on £120 per annum, suddenly finds himself the owner of half a million and a house in Harley Street. Dr. van Mildart, who lives next door, is a wealthy doctor who relies upon hypnotic suggestion for all his cures; he is a mysterious figure, and very soon a number of strange happenings throw suspicion upon him. Diamonds to the value of a quarter of a million disappear, and a young lady cashes a cheque for £1,000 without being conscious of her act; and so on. The excitement is cleverly worked up by Mr. Fletcher, who is a novelist of unusual attainments, and the climax comes in its right place—the end of the story. There is a strong love interest, and the handful of criminals who supply the excitement are a picturesque lot.

From The National Council of Evangelical Free Churches.—"Free Church Year Book, 1909." This handy volume is packed from cover to cover with information regarding the work, ideas and ambitions of Free Churchmen. It contains full reports of the Swansea meetings, in addition to a mass of statistics, legal information, lists of Nonconformist schools and colleges, social and philanthropic societies, &c. It is compiled in a readable manner, and is a book that few Free Churchmen can afford to be without.

From Messrs. J. Ouseley & Co.—"The New Nation, a Survey of the Condition and Prospects of South Africa," by H. E. S. Freemantle. The author is a member of the Progressive Party in the Cape. We do not imagine that his book will meet with unmixed approval in this country. Is it a fact that the South African Question which has perplexed English Statesmen for a hundred years, to-day no longer exists except for the historian, as he states, and that this is the result of Self Government? Have the English and Dutch entirely buried the hatchet? Mr. Freemantle believes they have, but most people will think it too early to come to such definite conclusions. The author deals with the question of national finance, the coloured races, and the nation's future and place in the world. The book contains a map and an excellent index.

From the Same.—"Unfair Play," by Mrs. Neville Cubitt. The title of the book is well worked out. A Mrs. Farquhar, by underhand work with a telegram, for a time breaks off the heroine's engagement to be married. But all comes right in the end. The novel is well written, and the chapter with an account of the heroine and the man she is fond of going to a meet of the hounds, an accident, and the heroine jumping two railway gates on her way to fetch the doctor, is very exciting.

From the Same.—"The Mersteins," by Countess Macchi. A simply told short story of attempted murder by poisoning. The scene is in Italy, and the chief characters are a copper-mine owner, his son, the manager, a mysterious doctor, and a beautiful woman. — "The Pagan," by George Samson. Mr. Samson has contrived to write an unpleasant story. His "pagan" woman is utterly selfish, and she secures none of the reader's sympathy. Precociously immoral, she blackmails her mother, and seems incapable of a good or generous action. — "Tom Genuflex," by Jane Rowland. A tale of church and chapel life, much gentle fun being made at the expense of a young deacon of ritualistic tendencies. A French girl possessing an imperfect knowledge of English supplies comic relief, and a wicked Baptist minister is used to arouse the reader's indignation.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Ltd.—"Elijah: an Ascent, a Poem in three Parts," by J. Pritchard. A religious exaltation breathes through this poem befitting its lofty theme. The author has wisely given a dignified metrical expression to thoughts in which poetry and piety are so vividly interwoven. Passages of much power and beauty abound in the poem that will be read with admiration by all lovers of the glowing Biblical narrative.

From Messrs. George Philip & Son, Ltd.—"An Elementary Course in Practical Science," by C. Foxcroft and T. Samuel, B.A. (Parts 1 and 2). These two small books—in conjunction with a third that has not yet reached us—provide a three years' course in Practical Elementary Science, specially suitable for Higher Elementary Schools which have a laboratory, but also suitable for use in the ordinary Elementary Schools in which there is no laboratory, as nearly the whole of Part 1 can be done with very little apparatus. Their object is the introduction into the day school of a much larger proportion of practical work than at present enters into the curriculum, and to correlate this practical work with that of the Manual Instruction Classes.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—"Fleet Street, and other Poems," by John Davidson. It is difficult to realise that the book before us is the last we may expect from the gifted Scottish poet and dramatist, who will be best remembered for his "Fleet Street Eclogues," and many "Ballads" of an earlier date. The present volume contains poems of unquestionable power and truth, and are faithfully, even painfully, realistic. Among them may be mentioned: — "Liverpool Street Station," "Two Dogs," and "The Thames Embankment," that are especially contemporary, both in spirit as in letter.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—"Roman Life and Manners under the Early Empire," by Ludwig Friedländer. Authorised translation by J. H. Freese, M.A., and Leonard A. Magnus, LL.B., Vol. 2. The importance of this monumental work can scarcely be exaggerated. Herr Friedländer's book has received the widest recognition in his own country; it has had an extensive and steady sale among all classes, and men of learning have welcomed it as one of the most graphic and minute accounts of the intimate life of Rome in the period of the Early Empire. The complete book is in three volumes, the first two of which have now been published. Vol. 2 is divided into three long chapters, dealing respectively with the Spectacles—the circus, amphitheatre, stadium, &c.; Roman Luxury—luxury of the table, of dress and adornment, luxury in dwelling-houses and domestic arrangements, luxury in funerals and in slaves; and the Arts—architecture, sculpture, painting, the artists, music, &c. The volume is full of the most absorbingly interesting detail, and the translation is smooth and easy.

From the Same. — "The First Printed Translations into English of the Great Foreign Classics." Compiled by William J. Harris, A.R.S.L. This bibliography has been compiled with the view of supplementing existing text-books on English literary history, and assisting students in preparing for examinations in Bibliography and Literature. It will also be found of service to those who are working for the professional examinations of the Library Association.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., L d.—"The Witch of Pendle," by J. D. Baxter. The main plot of this "Play of Tudor Days" is concerned with a love episode between Edmund Spenser (the Elizabethan poet) and Rose Dyneley, "a gentlewoman of no mean house." Among the dramatis personæ are the poet's rival, Jasper Asmenall, Walter Ralegh, and a seaman adventurer, fantastically named Tristram Magnificenza. These characters, necessary to the chief thread of the dramatic story, command the attention of the reader. There is sufficient merit and interest in this poetic play to fit it for stage representation.

From Messrs. Smith Elder & Co.—"Sir Redvers Buller," by Lewis Butler. Until the full, authorised biography of Sir Redvers Buller is issued, this sympathetic account of the great General's life will serve to satisfy the public curiosity regarding one of Britain's finest heroes. Mr. Butler knew Buller for many years, and his book is not only a biography-in outline, but also a well-drawn and detailed picture of the man himself, with his faults as well as his virtues, his limitations as well as his intellectual and moral greatness. There are several portraits which we do not remember to have seen before, and a facsimile letter.

From Mr. C. J. Thynne.—"Modern Romanism Examined," by the Rev. H. W. Dearden, with an introduction by the Rev. R. Sinker, D.D., third edition. The Bishop of Durham in a prefatory note commends the book as a model of clearness of insight and decision of statement upon the Anti-Roman side. It belongs, as he says, "to that not large class of controversial works which bring to the difficult

SCIENTIFIC IDEALISM: Or, Matter and Force, and their Relation to Life and Consciousness. By WILLIAM KINGSLAND, Author of "The Mystic Quest," "The Esoteric Basis of Christianity," etc.

This work has for its object to show how modern Scientific Concepts of Matter and Force, carried to their logical conclusion, lead to the highest form of idealism. This idealism may be said to be practically identical with all forms of thought which have as their Central Concept the Identity of the Self in Man with the Infinite Self or Power, by whatever name it may be called, which IS the Universe.

and painful process of religious debate a noble spirit of mingled decision and fairness," and it is therefore just the book to place in the hands of the anxious and sincere enquirer.

From The University Tutorial Press, Ltd.—"Matriculation English Course," by W. H. Low, M.A., and John Briggs, M.A., F.Z.S. A new edition of an important and indispensable work. It covers the whole of the revised London University Matriculation syllabus in English, embracing composition, précis-writing, paraphrase, and analysis of sentences.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—"Notes by the Way," with memoirs of Joseph Knight, F.S.A., Dramatic Critic and Editor of Notes and Queries, 1883–1907, and the Rev. Joseph Woodfall Ebsworth, F.S.A., Editor of the Ballad Society's publications. By John Collins Francis, author of "John Francis and The Athenæum." 8vo. cloth, pp. xliii and 340. The first xliii pages of this remarkable volume are occupied by a sketch of the life of Joseph Knight, who in 1883 succeeded Turle as Editor of Notes and Queries, and was therefore closely connected with the author from that date to the date of his death. Mr. Francis gives a very brief but charming account of his old friend. The concluding pages of the work, 289–325, contain a brief account of the life of Joseph Woodfall Ebsworth, who was also connected with Notes and Queries for many years. What makes one like what Mr. Francis writes is the affectionate warm-hearted way in which he speaks of his old friends. The remaining portion of the volume, that is, the 286 pages which follow Knight and precede Ebsworth, is made up of an immense variety of matter in one way or another connected with literature, from the time when Mr. William John Thoms founded Notes and Queries in 1849 to the present time. The volume may be characterised as an olla podrida of good things; it discourses de omnibus rebus et quibusdam aliis. Notes and Queries (founded in 1849) and Mr. Francis's contributions thereto seem to be the fountain head of all these notes about authors and publishers, book auctioneers and second-hand booksellers. To one who has lived through the whole period embraced by Mr. Francis' volume, from the foundation of Notes and Queries onwards, and known, with more or less intimacy, very many of the people mentioned by him, the book has a peculiar attractiveness. The discursive and miscellaneous character of the contents are brought together by an admirable Index. The book is sui generis, and will make friends all round.

From the Same.—"The Pools of Silence," by H. de Vere Stacpoole. Captain Berselius really belongs to the beginnings of things; he is a primitive creature of the forest, with an insatiable lust for killing, for blood. His personality, we are told, is overwhelming; he is a mixture of great good and great evil; and he is as cruel as a panther. With him to the Congo goes Dr. P. Q. Adams, as medical adviser; Berselius declares he is going after big game; in reality, he wants to kill, to kill always. The Congo administration is attacked violently, and there are drawn a few pen pictures which, for our soul's comfort, we would willingly forget. Berselius meets with an accident, and the author exploits with skill the problem of dual personality. A strong book—fresh, modern, and arresting.

From Messrs. Ward & Co., Ltd.—"A Very Doubtful Experiment," by L. G. Moberly. The authoress writes some of the nicest novels of the present day. There is a charm as well as a freshness about them which few writers attain to, and Miss Moberly's latest work is in no way behind the others. The plot is a curious one. When the reader has finished the last chapter there can be no doubt that his decision will be all in favour of the Experiment.

From Mr. C. H. White.—"Exiled Workers," by L. H. Dawson. A novel telling the life of two young clerks in England, both of whom, owing to labour strikes, have to seek work in the Colonies. It is a well written story and should become popular, although it is sad to read of educated men having to leave the home country in order to gain a livelihood, and not through any fault on their part.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate—"Primitive Christianity," translated by Dr. W. Montgomery from the German of Professor Otto Pfleiderer. The second volume of this important work contains chapters on each of the Synoptic Gospels and on the Acts, as well as on the Preaching of Jesus. While accepting in the main the sincerity of the sacred records, Dr. Pfleiderer regards the conception of Jesus as "the Son of God," and other supernatural elements of the Gospel story, as having arisen out of Western misunderstandings of Oriental imagery.
